Quigley pulls papers for Selectman

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

A candidate for Selectman wasted no time getting to the Town Clerk's office once nomination papers became available Thursday morning.

Karen Quigley of 27 Clay Spring Road pulled papers to signal her intent to run for one of two seats up for grabs in the election. Chairman Gary Vanderweil and Selectman Fred Koed currently hold the two three-year seats. Vanderweil announced he is not seeking a second-term, while Koed said he would run for re-election.

Quigley is a familiar figure in town politics; her name comes up 77 times in the Mariner archives dating back to 2003. Her name is nearly synonymous with the Harbor Health Committee; a Board of Selectmen appointed committee created in 2005 where she serves as chair.

"What I bring to the table is common sense, a big-picture perspective, a pro-active approach and a willingness and fortitude to make tough decisions," said Quigley.

A resident of Cohasset for over 33 years, Quigley has often been involved in issues relating to the environment and water ecosystems. In addition to her work on the Harbor Health Committee, she has served on the Open Space Committee, the Water Resource Protection Committee and the Stormwater Committee. She is also a member of the Republican Town Committee, a board member of the Cohasset Conservation Trust and a charter member of the Friends of Holly Hill Farm.

"What I bring to the table is common sense, a big-picture perspective, a pro-active approach and a willingness and fortitude to make tough decisions."
— Karen Quigley, candidate for selectman

She was a vocal proponent of a 2005 Town Meeting article to enable the Board of Selectmen to place a conservation restriction on town-owned land to protect Peppermint Brook, a main tributary to Lily Pond.

She ruffled a few feathers in her outspoken opposition of the Cook Estate when the town was working to develop affordable senior housing on the property off Sohier Street, but she says her concerns proved to be true as the project was eventually abandoned.

On the Harbor Health Committee she says she has brought together collaboration between local, state and federal environmental agencies to provide technical assistance, consultation and testing, at no cost to the town. Harbor Health Committee has worked with the towns of Scituate and Marshfield to file a joint application to instate a no discharge zone for boats in the coastal waters.

"I sincerely care about Cohasset. I believe I can make a difference," said Quigley.

In addition to Quigley, incumbent Rodney Hobson of 31 Deep Run and Mary Lou Lawrence of 15 Beach St. pulled papers for seats on the Board of Library Trustees.

Other positions available for the 2008 town election include: Selectmen — two for three-year positions; Moderator — one three-year position; Town Clerk - one three-years position; School Committee — one three-year position; Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three three-year positions; Assessor-one three-year position; Board of Health — one three-year position; Planning Board — one for five-year position and one three-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Recreation Commission - one five-year position; Sewer Commission-one three-year position; and Water Commission — one three-year position.

STAFF PHOTO/ROBIN CHAN

Last January the Paul Pratt Memorial Library staff unveiled "The Last Pick" by David J. McGillivray with Cohasset resident Linda Glass Fechter as its the first-ever "One Book One Cohasset" program. McGillivray is pictured here when he spoke to the Cohasset Rotary Club.

2007 meant change for Cohasset

By Nancy White and Mary Ford
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Big changes came in the year 2007, a few of which will impact our small New England town for many years to come.

After years of controversy and mitigation, the MBTA Greenbush line opened and ridership is on the rise. Two big developments were approved by the Planning Board – a 27-home community on the Cook Estate and a mixed-use retail/residential development in the transit-oriented district next to the commuter train. Two Cohasset neighborhoods gained a place to meet — the long-awaited Forest Avenue sidewalk was completed and the Beechwood Ballpark got a whole new look.

It wouldn't be a year in Cohasset without a little controversy — and the 2007 did not disappoint. The "sleepy" town election with no races turned into a hotly contested write-in campaign for School Committee seats. The Village, a place so close to many residents' hearts, underwent intense scrutiny while the village zoning bylaws were vetted and ultimately approved.

Some stories attracted the attention of those outside our town lines. Tragedy struck the first-time Cohasset Triathlon when one athlete died after being pulled from the waters off Sandy Beach. Then recently a Superior Court ruled the Cohasset schools could keep an eighth grader in a special education program against his parents' wishes.

Following is a recap of key events, decisions, and happenings around town during 2007 — the year in review, as we call it. At the same time, the Cohasset Mariner staff wishes everyone a happy, safe New Year and looks forward to covering the town throughout 2008 — which we expect will be another banner year for Cohasset.

JANUARY

Selectmen candidates don't waste any time pulling papers for the 2007 election. Incumbent Ralph Dornitzer and newcomer Paul Carlson both visit the Town Clerk's office the first day the nomination papers are available.

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library staff unveils "The Last Pick" by David J. McGillivray with Cohasset resident Linda Glass Fechter as its the first ever "One Book One Cohasset" program. The collective reading of one book will spark a host of discussion and activities aimed at bringing the community closer together.

George Roukounakis, long-time owner of the village gas station, calls it a day after 35 years. The new owner, Tom McBrien, renames Olympic Citgo Cohasset Village Car Care by McBrien's.

After 2006's failed override attempt, the School Committee gets an early start on the upcoming fiscal year's budget. School administration puts forth a level services budget and the School Committee votes 'no' to attempting a budget override. All five members agreed the town does not have the stomach to go for a tax hike.

POLICE BEAT

Another car stuck on the tracks

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In what police believe is the fourth such mishap at the North Main Street grade crossing, another car inadvertently drove onto the tracks.

Chief James Hussey said a 2003 Chrysler Carlisle driven by a Scituate resident was headed southbound on North Main Street (in the direction of the village) at about 4:40 p.m. on Saturday (Dec. 29) when the operator veered onto the tracks. Hussey said heavy fog might have played a role in the accident.

A Cohasset police officer, who was passing by, pulled over and had the two occupants of the car walk away from the vehicle. There were no injuries. Police and fire were dispatched to the scene and the MBTA was notified. Trains were stopped until the car was removed and tracks were checked.

"The people were following the roadway and did not realize they were leaving the street and driving onto the tracks," Hussey said.

Hussey said it was the second accident on that side of N. Main Street; there have also been two similar mishaps with cars veering off the road and onto the tracks with cars heading toward Hingham at the grade crossing.

"This is something that we have flagged for the MBTA," Hussey said, about the lineage on the road. "The fog lines appear to merge with the tracks."

Police have also talked to the Greenbush office at Town Hall that is reaching out to the MBTA on the matter, Hussey said.

Underage drinking

Acting on a tip from a guest at the Red Lion Inn, police found people drinking outside on the tiny lane that runs between the Inn and the gas station at about 12:45 a.m. on Sunday (Dec. 30). They also took a 20-year-old into protective custody.

The caller called 911 on his cell phone that went to the State Police and then to Cohasset. The guest said there were underage drinkers at the Inn and that he was paying $400 a night for the room and thought someone should be aware of the problem.

Police observed a number of people outside on the lane some of whom were holding beer bottles. When officers arrived the crowd dispersed. They stopped a 21-year-old who told them he had obtained the beer inside. Police explained that he was drinking on a public way and was subject to arrest. The officers went inside to speak with the manager about the public drinking and to stop people from leaving with alcohol.

The guest, who called, came to the lobby and told police that a young man was passed out in the upstairs hall. Police found a 20-year-old who told them he had been drinking there at the inn; police took him into protective custody and he was later released to his father.

Police went down to the "Cave" in the basement of the inn where about 40 people were dancing and had just been given "last call." They advised those in charge, to turn on the lights, empty out the premises, and make sure no one left the premises with alcohol.

At this time, it is not clear if this incident will be part of the Jan. 7 public hearing on other recent, alleged liquor license violations at the Red Lion Inn.

OUI arrest

An 18-year-old who was apparently "sleeping it off" in his car that was parked in the parking lot of a Route 3A business drove off when police were called and ended up being arrested for operating under the influence of alcohol.

Police received a call from an employee at a local business that found a young man passed out in a green Volvo at about 9 a.m. on Thursday (Dec. 27). It took a few minutes to wake him up, he was barefoot and all wet, the caller reported.

After the young man took off in the car, an officer stopped him by Shaw's. The officer could smell alcohol, the man was not wearing shoes, and he was unsteady on his feet. He allegedly told police he had driven from Hanover and was heading back there.

The officer arrested the 18-year-old Walpole teen for OUI (alcohol) and for failure to stop for a police officer.

Fight

Police responded to a call from a person saying he needed police assistance at about 1:20 p.m. on Sunday (Dec. 30).

When police arrived to the scene, which is near Summer Street and S. Main Street, police said a tenant-landlord dispute resulted in fisticuffs. A 19-year-old relative of the tenant was arrested and charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (shod foot) because he allegedly kicked the landlord in the face.

The other two males are being summonsed on assault and battery charges.

Check larceny

Police are investigating the apparent theft and subsequent cashing of a personal check from a former Cohasset resident. The incident was reported last Thursday (Dec. 27).

The person who cashed the $453 check used an out-of-state license and police are summonsing him to court.

The woman, who recently moved to Hull, told police she thought she had destroyed all the checks with her old address. It is not clear how the check was stolen but the woman told police she knows the suspect, who is a 21-year-old Holbrook man that helped her move. He is facing charges of larceny over $250 and forgery of a check.

MV crash

A Duxbury motorist told police she thought the stop at Summer and S. Main streets was a four-way stop. Police said she pulled out to cross over from Summer to Spring Street in her 1996 Land Rover when she was struck by a 2003 Honda driving by a Carlisle resident traveling on S. Main.

The Duxbury woman was cited for failure to use caution at an intersection. There were no injuries and there was minor damage to both cars, police said.

'No' for late train

For four long months, Fithi – the Our World Museum's 3-foot-long pet ball python — lived on her own inside the walls of the museum and adjoining Paul Pratt Memorial Library. TOWN MEETING VOTE

STAFF PHOTO/ELISA ALLEN

Ronnie Goodwin casts his vote on the water rate increase using an orange card for the hand count during last spring's annual Town Meeting. Town Meeting tackled 26 articles. Last minute write-in campaign

Through cooperation between state and local government, the town and MBTA are able to come to a resolution about parking spaces in the Village — an $110,000 dispute settlement from the MBTA as well as a $310,000 increase to the town's Public Works Economic Development (PWED) grant. The funds are earmarked to create more parking spaces and improve the aesthetics of the village lot.

APRIL

The one-day six-hour Town Meeting tackles 26 articles. A $35,340,212 fiscal 2008 budget was approved, with almost 39 percent devoted to the schools. Water rates were increased 15 to 40 percent depending on water usage.

With no races for any elected position, the Mariner predicted a low turnout election in its pre-election paper. But, after the paper went to press, Leonora Jenkins, a controversial figure in the eyes of many, announced her intent to run a write-in campaign for a School Committee seat. A counter write-in campaign for Lucia Flibotte followed.

An 11th-hour, a town-wide recorded message with the voices of former Selectman Ronnie McMorris and outgoing Selectman Rob Spofford said if elected Jenkins would cause "serious, long-term damage to our school system." The message left many wondering if this type of campaigning — a write-in effort that bypasses typical election procedures — may become a trend for Cohasset politics, others were disturbed by the negative tone of the message, and still others were propelled to vote upon receipt of the message.

When the dust settled at the election on Saturday incumbent Adrienne MacCarthy and write-in candidate Lucia Flibotte were elected to two seats on the School Committee, beating balloted School Committee candidate Peter Richardsson, and write-in candidate Jenkins.

A Patriots' Day storm with heavy rainfall causes the town wastewater treatment plant on Elm Street to overflow. Neighbors downstream from the plant are up in arms over both the flooding and possible untreated sewage in their backyards.

The Cohasset Historical Society opens its summer exhibit, "A Century of Hats."

It is now just a part of Cohasset's daily sights and sounds, but in May the Greenbush train makes its first trip through Cohasset. Many residents stood in a light rain at grade crossings to watch the first test train go by.

The Water Commission's rain garden project is growing. Fifteen more gardens to protect the watershed are planted in the spring.

The morning drizzle falling on Cohasset didn't deter hundreds of residents from coming out to salute their veterans in the least. New to Cohasset's Memorial Day festivities is a Field of Honor — 383 American flags installed across from Veterans Memorial Park.

JUNE

EDITORIAL

The Old Man and The Kid

The Old Man laid aside his scythe and splashed water on his face from the bowl on the table. He felt better for it, but not much. He sat on the sofa and let his battered limbs stretch out before him. That last trip to Iraq had taken a lot out of him. Had it done any good? He'd never know.

The Old Man looked at his watch. His tour of duty would be over momentarily. Where was that kid? He was tempted to go to the window and watch for him but he hadn't the energy. He was a kid once himself, a cocky youngster ready to take on the world. But that was months ago. Months? It seemed like eons.

The Old Man took out his logbook to enter his final report on the trip to Iraq. Things were looking up there, he thought. That thing they called "the surge" seemed to be working. At last, there seemed to be a light at the end of that long tunnel. But what then? Whatever, it wouldn't be his responsibility. He felt better.

He was applying the last question mark to the chapter on Iraq when the door burst open and The Kid came in. His traditional uniform, the diaper, was shiny in its whiteness. The numbered sash that draped from his shoulder sparkled in its newness. The Old Man envied his clean-cut appearance.

"You're late," said The Old Man.

The Kid looked at his watch.

"I'm early," he said.

"You were supposed to be here earlier than this so we could read my log together and I could give you some advice."

"I don't need to read your log to know how badly you screwed up."

"Screwed up? I got the Red Sox a World Series championship, didn't I?"

"Yeah, but only the second in 89 years."

"I got the Patriots an undefeated season."

"Yeah, but you didn't get them a Super Bowl."

"That's up to you," said The Old Man.

"Piece of cake," said The Kid.

The Old Man looked at him quizzically to see if he was kidding, decided he wasn't, then scooted back on the sofa and opened his logbook. The Kid came to stand behind him and looked at the book over his shoulder.

"Who are all those people running around?" he asked.

"They're candidates for president."

"So many. I hope you weeded some out for me."

"They're all still in there. Or most of them are, anyway."

"I guess I'll have to do it myself. Give me a week or two and I . . ."

"You don't have time. They're caucusing out there in Iowa right now. And they'll be voting next week in New Hampshire."

"But what'll I do?" The Kid was getting a little nervous and it showed in the question.

"Nothing any of us can do anymore," said The Old Man.

The Kid thumbed through a couple of pages in the log, pausing on the page labeled "Iraq." He looked at The Old Man.

"I've pretty much got that under control," said The Old Man. "That thing they call 'the surge' seems to have done it. I'd watch out for Afghanistan on the next page, though. And Pakistan."

"You think this surge would work there?"

The Old Man shrugged.

"Who knows," he said. "That will be up to you to find out. You'll have to find out for yourself what you can do about global warming, too."

"That should be a slam dunk," said The Kid.

"First of all, you'll have to convince some important people that there is such a thing as global warming."

How do I do that?"

"Up to you," said The Old Man. He looked at his watch. The second hand was creeping up on midnight. Tic . . . Tic . . . Tic . . .

"I want to talk to you about Britney Spears' kid sister, too," said The Kid. "Do you think that . . ."

He looked around him for The Old Man, but he was gone.

Health Notes

Making healthy 2008 resolutions

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Web, fountain of all knowledge, offers little for those going there to find an untapped sea of New Year's resolutions. It seems that everyone who has a periodic article to write does one on New Year's resolutions – and has done so for more than hundreds of years. It's not that there's nothing to say, it's that it's mostly all been said. And so the new take on resolutions about health has been advice on the nature of the process. "Make resolutions that are easy to keep; make more do resolutions than don't ones, etc." The health resolutions have all been around forever, and as our picture of a healthy life changes, so do resolutions. For example, when coffee was introduced into Europe, it was popular to say it was harmful because people drank coffee instead of the more healthy wine.

Of the different types of resolutions, some of the most popular are:

• Clean up: Straighten out the desk, closet, etc. Type – clip toenails, throw away old pills, order new supply of outdated, etc.

• The 'you really should' type: Prepare a listing of your medications, make copies and put them in your wallet and elsewhere you've felt dumb for not having them. Label bottles and boxes before you forget what they contain. Grit your teeth and pitch out stuff you really have no real reason to keep.

• The old staples: Lose weight, exercise, diet, etc. I guess, they're along there with motherhood and patriotism, but it seems to me that most people find these are last resort resolutions, and things have to get pretty bad before you invoke them. Maybe it's better to review your health picture dispassionately and identify one or two things that might make you feel better and concentrate on those.

Probably the best resolution you can make is to relax and have fun.

• Diet: Many of us tend to want to cut out major food groups, telling ourselves they cannot have any candy, dessert or carbohydrates. The reduction approach is much more realistic than the all-or-nothing technique, which labels foods as "good" or "bad." When people see certain edibles as "bad," they can end up obsessing about it. Work on getting adequate servings of whole grains, calcium, fiber, fruits and vegetables. And remember, getting a larger portion when eating out is folly from a diet standpoint and generally wrong for good nutritional balance. The day is gone when cleaning up your plate was a good thing.

• Exercise: According to the Mayo Clinic, enhanced muscle mass can not only help better manage weight, it can also improve endurance, maintain the flexibility of joints and reverse age-related declines in strength, bone density and muscle mass. One way to get such exercise is to get in the habit of intentionally starting out for an appointment 10 minutes earlier than it would take to get there and park a mile from your destination. If you do so, you'll be adding perhaps 10 percent to whatever walking you do daily and you'll be saving gas to boot. With the new GPS gadgets, which give time of arrival as well as distances, it's easy to park a fixed distance from your destination.

• Give up destructive habits: Develop a realistic assessment and then get serious about fixing the problem. Alcohol is probably on the list in this column, along with smoking. It's uncertain as to how to tackle these. One way is a pros and cons list. Make one up on each negative habit you perceive you may have acquired. Then give the list to someone close you know and trust and have them comment on it. Honest friends will try to help if they perceive a problem.

Probably the best resolution you can make is to relax and have fun. Enjoy your friends. The world isn't going to stop if you slow down some.

And remember, resolve, the word from which resolution stems, is a habit; it gets stronger with use.

ZBA decision on staging area crucial

COMMENTARY

PAUL L. LUALDI

Lawyers and non-lawyers are hotly debating the interpretation of the zoning bylaws and the issue of the staging area location for the largest construction project ever undertaken by the Town of Cohasset. At a recent ZBA meeting, some residents argued that the staging area is lowering their home values, that heavy construction equipment is passing over and destroying the roads while others are unable to "sleep in" in the morning because of the sound of safety beepers on construction vehicles. The facts are that home values will be increased once they are connected to the sewer and construction activities cannot be conducted without the operation of heavy construction vehicles and the associated traffic control effort. Water and sewer mains cannot be installed without tearing up the roads. Also, construction workers don't work "9 to 5" and don't have the luxury of "sleeping in." Other people question why the contractor started working in the winter. Had he started later the completion date required by the town would have been more difficult, if not impossible, to accomplish.

What is important is that the construction and associated inconveniences be limited to the construction area and that costly and delaying contract change orders be avoided.

The town selected and authorized the contractor to perform this major construction project to benefit the town by improving our water supply, wastewater disposal and drainage. A project of this nature and magnitude can be disruptive. What is important is that the construction and associated inconveniences be limited to the construction area and that costly and delaying contract change orders be avoided. What is also important is that work be completed on schedule by summer of 2009 as to not violate the court's judgment. It is in the best interest of the whole town to cooperate with and facilitate our contractor rather than obstructing his activities. The contractor is doing a fine job implementing the work scope specified by the town. He is performing a challenging assignment under difficult conditions.

The contractor selected an optimum site for his staging area, which minimizes the impact of construction on the town. He received approval of the site location from the town and has been paid for establishing the staging area. For the town now to take action to repeal its authorization based on the appeal of a neighbor would transfer the inconvenience of the staging area to another part of town and add construction traffic and road safety problems to many more town streets. The contractor would not be at any risk. If directed to relocate the staging area, he would likely comply and then issue change orders to the town reflecting the additional costs involved and extending the guaranteed completion date of the project. The bottom line is that the town residents and taxpayers are the ones who are at risk and who could be adversely impacted.

When considering the staging area, I believe that town boards should focus on what is in the best interest of the town and its residents and not a just the complaints of a few individuals who are experiencing only a temporary, minor inconvenience with no irreparable damage to property. The intent of zoning bylaws is to protect the public from detrimental actions taken by others. We should not allow the laws to be used to adversely affect the public for the satisfaction of a few. The decision of the Planning Board in favor of the appellant was a disservice to the town. How the ZBA decides at its meeting on Jan. 8, 2008, is crucial to all of us.

Letters to the Editor

Shutting down Lily Pond

TO THE EDITOR:

So, let me get this straight, after more than 100 years of winter family activities Lily Pond is now shut down? At least the Grinch only stole Christmas. The Cohasset Water Department stole the whole winter!

Did you guys really think it was a good idea to start up your aeration tubes Dec. 15 when skating, ice fishing and other winter activities can begin? Are you so young that you only play video games or are you so old that you just sit in front of a TV set all winter? Plus, the Cohasset Recreation Department bought into this!

Besides church, there is no better area where whole families can get together than Lily Pond. Parents and grandparents teach fishing and skating to their children there. Then we get to enjoy hours on the ice in a beautiful setting. Look out your office window. Lily Pond is gorgeous in winter and you want to shut it down? I don't think you have that right. It's a good thing for you that Lily Pond's Patron Saint, Sumner Smith, passed away a few years ago. Although a kind old gentleman he'd be busting down your door with his hockey stick to lift the ban. Do the right thing: shut down your bubble machine until March.

Happy New Year.

Christmas Angel Project

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the board and staff of Cohasset Elder Affairs, I would like to extend our deepest thanks for all who made beautiful gift baskets for Cohasset Christmas Angel Program. Thanks to the members of the Social Service League, members from the Second Congregational Church, the teachers from the Osgood School and members from the community, 26 seniors received wonderful gift bags and baskets for Christmas. The remarks from the recipients were filled with gratitude at being remembered. One said, "Each gift in the basket was something I love. Someone really took time to put this together." Another said, "I am overwhelmed."

Cohasset's seniors have had many opportunities to celebrate the Holiday Season, beginning with a Thanksgiving Feast at the Atlantica Restaurant thanks to the Roy family and Joe Campbell and his team; the Angel Food Program, who prepared a delightful Christmas Lunch and members of St. Anthony's Choir who led us in caroling; and Anna's Gourmet Club for preparing and serving a bountiful feast of goodies for the End of Year Soiree held at the Cohasset Historical Society.

The beauty of the Christmas Angel Program is that many of the recipients are seniors who weren't able to attend festivities outside of their homes.

As the director of Cohasset Elder Affairs, I am constantly delighted with the many kindnesses of members of the community extend to our seniors. Cohasset may be a small town – but it is filled with residents with very big hearts.

Director of Cohasset Elder Affairs

OCTOBER – Patriots Coach Bill Belichick is accused of stealing plays radioed by Jets Coach Eric Mangini to a receiver in his quarterback's helmet by intercepting them and relaying them from a satellite to a receiver in Tedy Bruschi's shoulder pads. Belichick says he's only interested in getting ready for the next game.

NOVEMBER – Barack Obama is elected president of the United States by a landslide over Mike Huckabee. Majority of persons interviewed in exit polls say they refused to vote for someone whose name sounds like a fast food restaurant. Obama names Grand Old Oprah Winfrey secretary of state.

"We knew our sixth grader was happy at school, but we also sensed that he wasn't being challenged. In just two years at Derby, our son flourished. With small classes and those close teacher/student relationships, he became passionate again about his academics and discovered talents he never thought he had. We are so pleased with what Derby has done for our son."

Keith Lockhart, famed conductor of the Boston Pops orchestra, says he enjoys the "intimate" setting his annual show at the Music Circus provides. For the fourth year running, the renowned orchestra played a concert to benefit the South Shore Arts Center.

Cohasset's Top 10 Stories of 2007

10. The Beechwood Ballpark completes its renovation in the fall with the opening of a new baseball field, basketball court and playground.

9. The assault of a 15-year-old Cohasset High sophomore, who ended up with both wrists in a cast, after a fellow student or students attacked him.

8. Cohasset Hardware closes its doors in the spring after months of clearance sales. Despite receiving a permit for four upstairs apartments, the owners decide to put the iconic Village building up for sale in November.

6. After heavy rainfall on Patriots' Day, the Wastewater Treatment Plant overflows. Stormwater and severe flooding of Jacob's Meadow compound the issue.

5. A Norfolk Superior Court judge ruled the Cohasset schools could keep Peggy and Kevin Lewis's son, an eighth grader at the middle-high school in a special education program against the parent's wishes.

4. Two 11th-hour write-in campaigns for School Committee seats drum up voters and controversy in the April Town Election.

3. Village zoning bylaws were an on-going discussion throughout the year. The bylaws promote mixed-use with retail use on the first floor and apartments upstairs to enable a viable economic center; they passed at November Special Town Meeting.

2. The success of the inaugural Cohasset triathlon, which brought hundreds of athletes to town, was tempered by the death of a triathlete who was pulled from the water during the first leg of the race.

1. After a nearly 50-year hiatus, commuter rail service on the Greenbush line returns to Cohasset on Halloween.

They said it: Quotes of Note

"We've kicked this around for awhile and finally, we made a decision to expand and move forward with changes to the building."

— Jim Watson, owner of Cohasset Hardware

"It's taken a long, long time — longer than it should have thanks to the delaying tactics by those fine people in Hingham."

— Louis Eaton, Cohasset resident, at the Greenbush Final Spike ceremony in February

"Maybe we'll change things and shoot ourselves in the foot. As a town, we're famous for that."

— Al Moore, on village zoning

"If we had an applause meter — the folks who are against the late train are vehemently against it."

— Mark Brennan, Greenbush liaison on the potential for a late-night train

"My first reaction was that I probably heard it wrong when someone referred to the 'Troika' the first time."

— Town Manager Bill Griffin on "What is the Trioka?"

"I feel no joy today, just a lot of sadness. My heart goes out to the victim's family."

— Bill Burnett, Cohasset Triathlon Race Director

"A safer route to the train, schools, library, ball fields and the village will help connect us to the rest of town life in a way we couldn't enjoy before without packing everyone up in the car."

— Trish Morse, on Forest Avenue sidewalk completion

"For 52 years village zoning has been in the hands of the zoning board, if there is a turf war it has been created by the planning board."

— Woody Chittick, Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman on the Village bylaw

"We are at a time where our schools are being run by high stakes testing, but we can't lose sight of educating the whole child…we need to keep reminding ourselves it's not all about test scores, these are real kids with real problems."

— Mike Gill, High School Assistant Principal at presentation of the bullying policy

"I don't care which board it is, just don't throw the baby out with the bathwater."

— Chris Ford, village property owner on the turf war over the village bylaw

"Yahoo for school! Yahoo for us!"

— Mike Corry, CHS Class of 2007 President, at graduation

"For such a small community, Cohasset has contributed beyond its dimension. The men and women of this community have willingly and courageously stepped forward when this nation has called."

— Donald Staszko, Memorial Day speaker

"It sounds incredibly complicated and in some ways it is.

— Mike Westcott of the Planning Board on the village bylaw

'North Cohasset is part of our community."

Joseph McElroy of Windy Hill Road on hooking North Cohasset up to town water.

"All of us are in this together. It's our baby, it's our world, we've got to do something about it."

Mimi White on the need for alternative energy

"The big sign did not work and the little sign is no better."

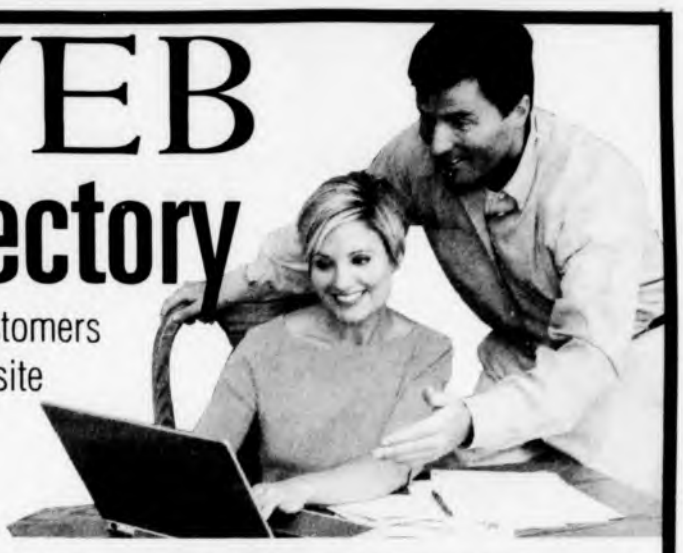
Hingham PMC Kids Ride volunteer meeting

Kids from all over the South Shore will raise funds to benefit the Dana -Farber Cancer Institute, learning about the satisfaction of philanthropy while participating in a fun family day and enjoying physical activity.

Although it looks like winter is here for a while, planning has already started for the Second Annual Hingham Pan-Mass Challenge (PMC) Kids Bike Ride. The initial organizational meeting for volunteers will be Wednesday, Jan. 9 at 7 p.m. at the Hingham Library. The ride, designed for kids from three to 15, will take place at Hingham High School on Sunday, June 22. Kids from all over the South Shore will raise funds to benefit the Dana -Farber Cancer Institute, learning about the satisfaction of philanthropy while participating in a fun family day and enjoying physical activity. Volunteers are needed for all aspects of the event from planning the post -ride celebration to monitoring the bike route and cheerleading.



Kids participating in the 2007 Hingham ride raised more than $64,000 to benefit the Dana Farber Cancer Institute and just as important, the more that 550 riders between the ages of 3 and 15 enjoyed a fun-filled family day and experienced the satisfaction of giving to others. Kids on all kinds of bikes including those with training wheels from all over the South Shore participated.

For information on the PMC and the PMC Kids program go to www.pmc.org.

Four third period goals rally Skippers to tie

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

You probably can't start a hockey game any worse and you arguably can't finish one any better than the Cohasset High boys did Wednesday night at Rockland Ice Arena against the Bulldogs. After Rockland dominated play for almost the entire game, the Skippers mounted a seemingly insurmountable comeback, to tie the game, 5-5, and are now 2-2-1 for the season. The tie dropped Rockland, a team off to a hot start, to 4-2-2.

Sophomore Brendan Doonan notched the first two goals for the Skippers assisted both times by senior captain Charlie "Chaz" Czerkawski, first in the second period making the score 5-1, and then with a little over ten minutes to play in the game.

"It was really ugly up to the point when Rockland took a penalty for interference with 9:51 left in the third," Cohasset head coach Bob Walsh said early Thursday morning. "That was a pivotal point for us. Rockland coach Jim Casagrande took a time out that gave me an opportunity to set up an offensive zone face off with the Goetz brothers, (Alex (Sr. captain) and Anders (Fr.)).

"I remember telling the boys that we don't need or want to take a full minute and a half to score a goal. We set the play and seven seconds later we were on our way."

Alex scored assisted by his younger brother and fellow senior captain Frank Wheelwright. With 4:22 left in the game, senior captain Pat Doonan scored with the assist coming from Wheelwright. This made the score 5-4 Rockland. With less than a minute in regulation, Walsh pulled goalie Jonny Wade from net to get the extra attacker and with five seconds remaining, Anders Goetz came up huge, scoring the game-tying goal on Wheelwright's third straight assist.

Cohasset (2-0 in the South Shore League) defeated league opponents Carver (5-2) and Abington/East Bridgewater (1-0), with the pair of losses coming

Girls dominate consolation game

Lehr sisters too much for Wildcats to handle

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The girls side of the Cohasset Holiday Basketball Classic was certainly stacked with good basketball teams. When the Lady Skippers found themselves in the consolation game against West Bridgewater there wasn't a feeling of disappointment or lost opportunity.

They had fought tooth and nail the night before against Sacred Heart only to lose, 41-33, in a game where the score didn't represent how close it was. Friday they had a date with West Bridgewater, a tournament team from a year ago with 1,000-point scorer Julie Conrad.

Cohasset made it look easy shutting down the Wildcats and Conrad to win the game 48-15, and improve to 3-2 overall (1-1 in the South Shore League). Taking advantage of their height and ball movement on offense, the Lady Skippers made quick work.

"I think we played really well today in that I think it was a good

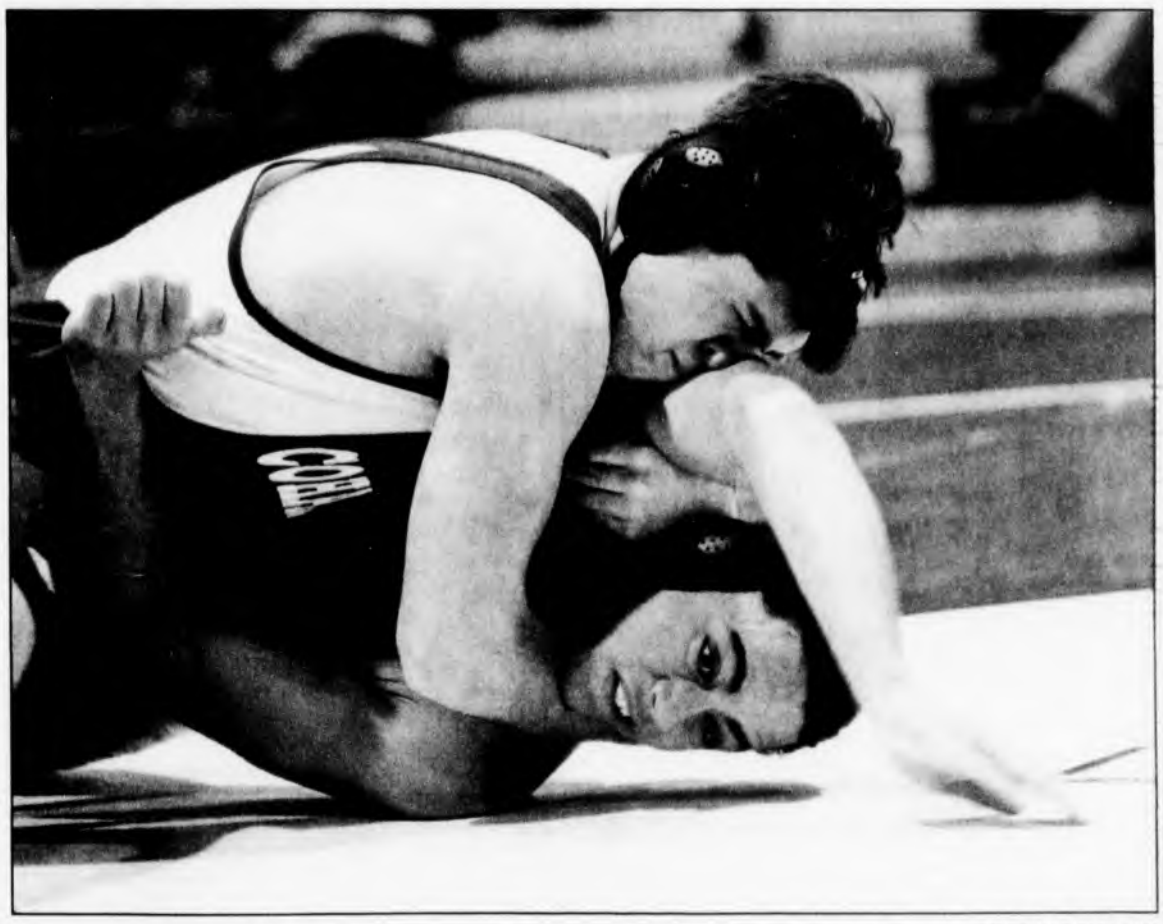
Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tournament



The Skippers didn't fare too well at the Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tournament although there were a couple of bright spots.

Mike Froio (160, Jr., C) took fifth place in a very competitive weight class. Steve Hurlbut (215, Sr., C) took fourth place. Both wrestlers had 6-2 records four the two-day tournament.

A number of wrestlers went 2-2 on the first day. Matt Dooley (103), Andrew Littauer (140), David Toomey (145), Jake Wheelwright (152) and Nick Secatore (171) all went 2-2. Jack Murphy (119) won three matches but was knock out the second day.

The following wrestlers placed in the sub-varsity tournament, Saturday, Thomas Flibotte (second), Ross Collins-Wooley (third), Chris Brady (third), Chris O'Grady (fifth), Rudy Helboch (fifth), Colin Tarpey (seventh) and David Hurlbut seventh.

"We were very pleased with the effort of both groups of kids over the vacation and show of dedication with the practice schedule," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. Cohasset gets back to dual meets, Saturday with a difficult competition that includes three Division 1 schools, Braintree, Bridgewater-Raynham and St. John's prep.

Sixth Graders tangle in Stonehill tourney

Cohasset's 6th grade boys travel basketball team participated in a three-game tournament over the holiday weekend at Stonehill College in Easton, MA. The tournament included a highly competitive collection of teams that presented some terrific challenges for the twelve year-old hoopsters.

"It was a great learning experience to play against some bigger towns with some bigger talent. That gave the boys a chance to see the results of well-executed team play and the effectiveness of high quality press defense and perimeter passing.

Cohasset came up short in the three games against Westwood, 50-20, Easton, 43-20, and Franklin, 32-30, but ended the tournament a little longer in the tooth on big game play.

The boys improved with every game and as the scoring margins went down the shooting percentages went up.

Westwood is a very aggressive group of kids that execute an effective press defense and forced a lot of turnovers that kept Cohasset's number of shots at a minimum. Cohasset had some chances at the foul line but came up a little light, converting on a mere 10 percent of 19 attempts compared to Westwood's 50 percent on 21 attempts.

Joe Buckley led the team in scoring with some tough points on solid drives to the hoop. Mark Brown made some nice lay-ups from close range. Doug Fitzgerald played well from the guard position, including some timely rebounds. Rocco Laugelle, Chris Haggerty, Zach Coggins and Timmy Cavanaro each added to the score sheet, but in the end Westwood's relentless attack would prove too much to overcome.

It was a great learning experience to play against some bigger towns with some bigger talent.

Next up, host Easton fielded a solid team that included another high percentage foul-shooting group that could disrupt Cohasset's rhythm. However, Cohasset would improve their foul-shooting with more attempts, and began to tighten up their passing attack to loosen the opponent's defense.

Brendan O'Connell and Mark McKenna both played steady from the point guard position setting a nice pace with some great perimeter passing. The game was tied 8-8 midway through the first half before things started to slip away.

Chris Haggerty continued his hot hand with a nice stroke to the hoop. Mark Brown maintained his relentless attack down low, scoring four points and making a couple trips to the line. Laugelle increased his visits to the foul line and contributed four points to the tally. Buckley snatched his share of rebounds and scored a pair, Coggins drained a nice jumper from outside and Cavanaro logged a point with a solid foul shot.

Connor Green played a terrific game to lead the team in scoring with a couple of great baskets off the boards, and adding a point from the foul line. Green also played some tough defense to post another big number in the rebound column. Cohasset fought well but could not overcome Easton's steady success throughout the game.

The final match of the weekend was against a small but speedy club from Franklin. Franklin's size may have had a hand in their lopsided occupation of the foul line all game long.

Cohasset's opponent would make 32 trips to the foul line compared to a paltry 14 for Cohasset. Fortunately, Cohasset increased their success rate from line against Franklin.

Cohasset delivered a much improved attack with more good setup work from O'Connell at the point. McKenna played a very aggressive game that included some smart passing, good rebounds and a nice jumper to keep things close.

Cohasset led 16-15 at the half.

Mark Rattenbury was an absolute force in this contest to lead the team in scoring with a tournament game high of 10 points, including 2-2 from the foul line. Rattenbury had a whale of a game on the boards posting rebounds on both ends of the court and took advantage of his height differential all game.

Brown would add another half dozen with a mix of close range buckets and good free throws and Haggerty put on a clinic with his sweet touch from the perimeter to score six points, including a beauty from downtown to tie the game 29-29 with 2:00 minutes left.

Laugelle drained a big foul shot to keep Cohasset within one, 31-30, with 47 second left before Brown would be called for putting a lacrosse move on a power forward.

The tournament was a great experience for a good group of boys that showed some grit down the stretch. In the wake of defeat, this team looks forward to catching a wave of success.

WHAT A WONDERFUL YEAR

win especially after playing last night in such a tough game against Sacred Heart," said Cohasset coach John Levangie. "So to come back the next day that shows a lot of mental toughness and that is what we are trying to develop."

Cohasset's need to develop mental toughness stems from the fact there isn't a single senior on its roster. According to Levangie that may have factored into the Sacred Heart loss.

"A little bit of youth and inexperience hurt us," Levangie said about the opening round loss. "You have to be in those game to win them, we won one with Carver, we lost one (Sacred Heart) but we are in them and in the long run that is really going to help us."

Holding West Bridgewater to 15 points and Julie Conrad to five is a testament to the Cohasset team defense, most notably the interior.

"I'm not sure they were hot today," Levangie said about West Bridgewater. "They were cold in the beginning. They're not a bad team, they're a pretty good team actually—just had a bad day."

Sisters Sammi and Tori Lehr were forces in the paint, turning away a number of Wildcats shots and grabbing defensive rebound after defensive rebound.

Offensively the duo combined for 17 points. The Cohasset offense spread the ball around and nine different players scored including, Tori (9 points), Sammi (C, 8), Carli Haggerty (8), Kayla Farren (C, 6), Carly Salerno (C, 6), Lindsay Davis (4), Rachel Fredey (3), Meredith Kelley (2) and Samantha Crough (2).

"We moved the ball better," Levangie said about the offensive flow. "We moved the ball inside when that was open, when it wasn't we were kicking it back and finding the open shot."

Despite the lack of senior leadership, Cohasset has plenty of leaders in the junior class, including all three captains, Salerno, Farren and Lehr.

"The juniors are providing the leadership that we need," said Levangie.

against Mansfield. Walsh, now in his second year at the helm since coming over from Bridgewater State College, has implemented a college style game play into the Skippers system.

He has taken basic systems from last year and tweaked them into a more expansive playbook that has the boys skating with their feet and using their heads in a more refined hockey manner.

"We started the season a little later more by design," Walsh said. "I wanted a month of training camp because this year we are running multiple systems and for them it's significantly different.

"It's like college hockey—we want to compete at a different level."

Doonan brothers Pat and Brendan, Czerkawski, Wheelwright, the Goetz brothers and Ian Lyster are among the Skippers that will try and lead the team back to the post-season in 2008.

Goalie Jonny Wade will be a vital cog in whatever success the Skippers plan on having this year, and so far he has delivered the goods. Wade is learning under the tutelage of new goalies coach Cole Clifford.

"He is in a lot better shape physically than he has ever been in, this year he has turned into a real goalie," Walsh said about Wade. "He has always been a real tough competitor but he couldn't do what he can do now."

Clifford, who played at Xaverian Brothers High School in Westwood, MA, is helping Wade along. He brings a fresh perspective from former goalie coach Dayce Moore, who taught Wade a "ton" last year according to Walsh. Now with Clifford, Wade has had the benefit of two different styles of teaching to learn from, and it seems to be paying off.

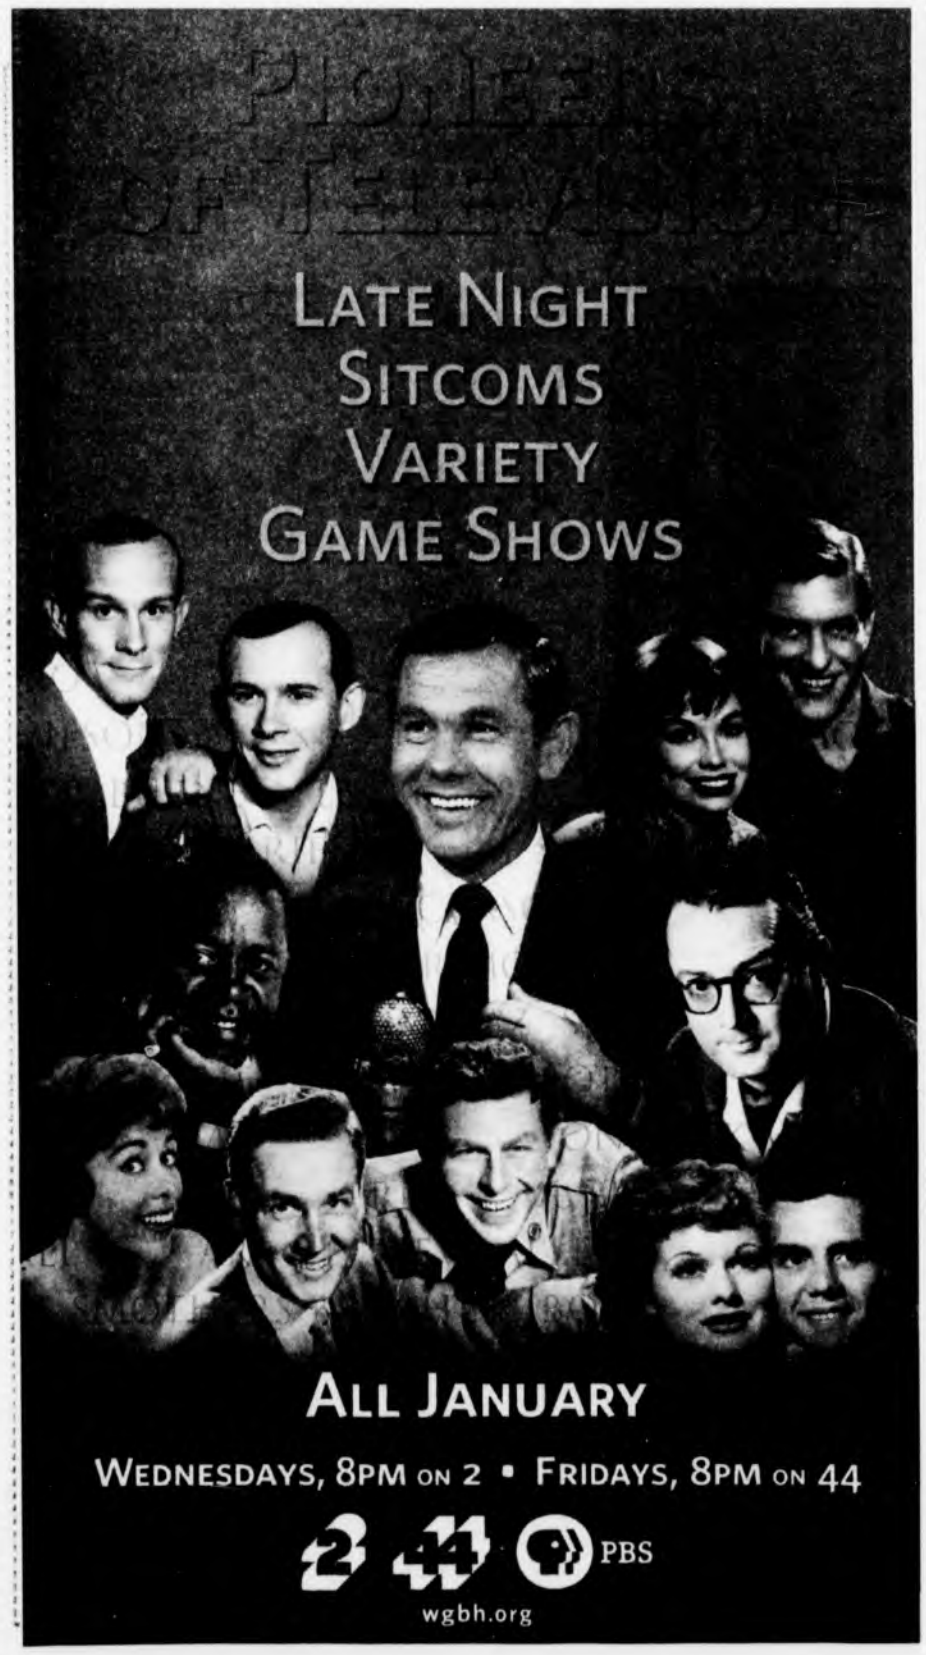
"Dayce was the cake, Clifford the frosting," Walsh said. "Now Wade has brought his game to a whole other level in terms of angles and where to be—more basics of goaltending."

"I remember telling the boys that we don't need or want to take a full minute and a half to score a goal. We set the play and seven seconds later we were on our way."

Cohasset head coach Bob Walsh

Wade's best game to date is a 52 save shutout performance against Abington/EB.

The "Doon Squad," as Walsh likes to call it, will play an integral role in any successes Cohasset will have this year. Brothers Pat and Brendan, star athletes in their own right, return as top flight offensive weapons, older brother Pat holding the title as the teams top returning point scorer from a year ago with 25 plus.



Making the state tournament and going deep is a goal Cohasset hopes it can attain, and with this talented group that plan could be realized.

"Obviously we want to go deeper in the tournament and we want to be more competitive in our league," Walsh said.

Losing seven seniors, including stars Chris Davis and Conor Holway won't be easy to replace, but Walsh thinks he has the guys to get the job done this year.

"This is a very promising team they know what I expect and how to behave," Walsh said. "They want to play and do well and at this point that is all they are thinking about."

Citizen of the Year nominations being sought

See nomination form on page 14

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In keeping with an 15-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement - the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Roger Whitley as Citizen of the Year. Whitley, a retired architect, former Advisory Committee member, and Paul Pratt Library Trustee, has spent much time over his 50 years as a Cohasset resident "involved." That involvement has not stopped at Town Hall or at the library. He is active at First Parish Church, once led the Rusty Skippers (town band) as its drum major, and joined the Peace Corps with his wife, Kitty, after the kids were grown and off on their own.

The deadline for nominations for the 2007 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m. Friday, Feb. 1. Please see the nomination form on page 14. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931. Letters of nomination by email to mford@cnc.com are also welcome.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel - after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments - will select the Citizen of the Year.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, firefighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the15th person honored as the Cohasset Citizen of the Year, joining past recipients:

1993: Gerard T. Keating, "Mr. Cohasset": for his more than half-century of contributions to the community, including serving as chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharistic minister and usher at St. Anthony's Church.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors understand the complexities of the healthcare system and to access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), his service on the Council on Aging, and volunteer work over the years with the Boy Scouts, Little league, Sunday School and more.

1995: Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated service as a pediatrician in town and school doctor. He also served on the board of health and led the fight back in the 1970s to sewer the town. He is also a familiar figure at town meetings where he speaks his mind on important issues.

1996: The Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for being a positive force for good through his work with the Appalachia Service Project (ASP), an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers. ASP is a home building ministry in central Appalachia.

1997: Anna Abbruzzese, for all her volunteer work including preparing and delivering meals for the Pine Street Inn, driving the senior shuttle and coordinating the Gourmet Cooking Club at the Council on Elder Affairs; and her many efforts to help revitalize Cohasset Village through the Farmers' Market and much more.

1998: Katherine Stanton, for her tireless service to the town and its citizens over the years. She also volunteers as a case reviewer for the state Dept. of Social Services, served on the school committee and recreation committee, and along with her family was involved with the creation of the Cohasset Sailing Club.

1999: Clark Chatterton, for his generosity of spirit and deep caring for his fellow man, his years of work as a teacher and athletic director at the high school, including innumerable efforts helping others behind the scenes. He also helped raise money for many causes including Alumni Field and the American Cancer Society.

2000: former state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray for a lifetime of service to her hometown, first as den mother and Little League mother and Girl Scout leader, and then as selectman. She was also honored for her public service as state representative for more than two decades and for always putting her constituents first.

2001: Glenn Pratt for his dogged determination over 20 years to see more cemetery space in town, remembering local soldiers who made the ultimate sacrifice, helping to lead the effort to expand the community center, serving as an elected official, and spearheading the effort to build a memorial to local mothers who lost sons in wartime.

2002: Arthur Lehr for more than 50 years of volunteer service on worthwhile projects including the Boy Scouts; serving on the Zoning Board of Appeals and as a Registrar of Voters; Clerk of the Works for the DPW garage, Little League Complex, and Mariners Park; serving on the Recycling Committee, as town Civil Defense Director, on Gravel Pit Reuse Committee and more.

2003: Marjorie Murphy for touching countless lives through her roughly 25 years as school librarian at Deer Hill. With eyes that twinkle and an infectious smile, Mrs. Murphy devoted her life to helping children discover the wonders of reading and the value of a good book.

2004: John Coe, a WWII veteran, for all his volunteer service at the Senior Center where he helps make the center a warm place where people come and meet friends; for his work quietly behind the scenes helping fellow citizens and his service as the "beloved Town Crier" every year at the Village Fair.

2005: Marjorie "Margie" Steele, who is the "heart and soul of the Cohasset Food Pantry," for her energy and long-time commitment to the important service, which has helped countless people in need over the years.

2006: Roger Whitley, a retired architect, former Advisory Committee member, and Paul Pratt Library Trustee, who has spent much time over his 50 years as a Cohasset resident "involved."

Land of the Water Horse - exploring Scotland's Loch Ness region

Joe Yogerst
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

DRUMNADROCHIT, SCOTLAND -

I have never knowingly seen a ghost, never been kidnapped by aliens, and in all the tramping and trekking I've done, I've never come across anything that remotely resembled the missing link. Yet I find myself perched on a bluff overlooking Loch Ness, double-checking every ripple and shadow, hoping against all hope that a mythological creature called Nessie really does exist.

And I am not alone. Tens of thousands of people flock to the famous Scottish Highlands lake, hoping they will be blessed with a Nessie sighting. And the number will no doubt grow substantially with the release of "The Water Horse," a film version of the beloved children's book by Dick King-Smith about a Scottish boy who discovers a rather large egg on the shores of Loch Ness that eventually hatches into a cute little plesiosaur.

There have been stories for years, going all the way back to 565, when Saint Columba reportedly drove away a water monster by making the sign of the cross over Loch Ness. Norse and Celtic folklore embraces several mysterious water-dwelling creatures, including a sea serpent called the Orm and malevolent kelpies (a.k.a. water horses) that would seize fishermen and drag them into the depths never to be seen again.

But the Nessie phenomenon did not hit fever pitch until the 1930s when the lakeshore highway between Inverness and Fort Augustus was completed. Monster sightings skyrocketed, research parties were dispatched to find Nessie, and a local doctor snapped the famous black-and-white photo of a long-necked dinosaur swimming through the lake.

Loch Ness in Scotland may hold mysteries.

There have been stories for years, going all the way back to 565, when Saint Columba reportedly drove away a water monster by making the sign of the cross over Loch Ness.

A legend was born

And so was local tourism. The photo was later revealed as a hoax.

The village of Drumnadrochit on the lake's western shore is Nessie central, home to half a dozen gift shops, several large plaster plesiosaurs that provide a backdrop for countless snapshots, and two multimedia museums centered around the world's most famous aquatic dinosaur.

In typical screwball Hollywood fashion, a lake in New Zealand - not Scotland - played Loch Ness in "The Water Horse." But many of the movie's key scenes were filmed in and around Ardkinglas Estate to the south of Loch Ness, a sprawling Edwardian manse and gardens that can be visited by appointment.

People don't visit Loch Ness just for the mythical monster. The long, thin lake is gorgeous, surrounded by thick forest rising to rocky outcrops and heather-covered plateaus. Best viewed from the water, of course, in boats like the Deepscan, which took me on an hour-long cruise down one of those glorious Highland days when there isn't a cloud in the sky.

The boat dropped me at a dock below Urquhart Castle, its stone ramparts and towers crowning a bluff above the lake. One of the largest castles in Scotland, the 13th century fortress witnessed many a bloody encounter between the English and Scots.

On another day, I drove inland from the lakeshore to Glen Affric, one of the few spots in the highlands where the ancient Caledonian Pine forest survives. Following a meandering path through the woods, I made my way along whiskey-colored streams and beneath cloud-shrouded mountains in the upper glen, on the lookout for the otter, pine martin, the majestic red deer and other local wildlife.

Yet all of this incredible nature and fascinating history continues to live in the shadow of an imaginary dinosaur, an irony that does not escape local writer and researcher Adrian Shine, the world's leading expert on Nessie and a consultant on "The Water Horse."

"I was a true believer when I first started," says Shine. "But lack of scientific evidence has led me to conclude there is no Nessie. But there are more than 1,000 people out there - the many who have claimed to have seen the creature - who would beg to differ."

Exploring the lake by submarine, sonar and various other means, Shine has been able to disprove most of the sightings as wakes, waves, shadows, vertical blasts of air and other natural phenomenon. Still, he allows for the possibility that the creature may very well exist. "One binding thing about all the people who come to Loch Ness is that we would all very much like for there to be something there."

And so I on my visit, I continue to scan the lake every chance I get, scrutinizing every wake and shadow, hoping that I will be the one to finally, undeniably prove that the water horse of lore is more than just a legend.

Lonesome Lake has plenty to offer in winter

Stephen Jermanok
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

IN NEW ENGLAND

FRANCONIA, N.H. -

You can't get lonesome at the White Mountains' Lonesome Lake when the weather is warm. A 1.75-mile trail from the campground at Franconia Notch State Park leads through a sheltered spruce and fir forest to the shores of this bowl-shaped lake where inevitably families will be splashing and squealing joys of delight.

But when the weather chills, you'll find solitude in the north woods.

Thankfully, the Appalachian Mountain Club keeps its Lonesome Lake Hut open in winter. It's now that you can savor Franconia's carved granite - and the surrounding 5,000-foot mountains - in all their rime-encrusted splendor with rarely a peep heard.

Lonesome Lake Hut joins two other AMC lodges that are open year-round. Cross-country skiers glide some seven miles along an iced-over stream to spend the night at the Zealand Hut while the far more strenuous Nineteen-Mile Brook Trail attracts snowshoers to the Carter Notch Hut.

Don't expect cushy B&Bs. At Lonesome Lake Hut, two detached bunkhouses that sleep 40 are located like bookends around a dining hall and small library. The hut is self-serve and can be downright chilly, so guests must bring winter sleeping bags and all their food. Yet, having a hot stove, cookware, mattress and blankets are preferable to camping outdoors in December. What you get in return is a good dose of tranquility and expansive views of snowcapped peaks.

For families who prefer to have a guide escort them through the woods to Lonesome Lake Hut, consider the Feb. 18-20 trip with naturalist Nancy Ritger. You spend one night at the AMC's Highland Lodge in the heart of Crawford Notch, the next day on snowshoes as you hike to Lonesome Lake Hut, and the final day trek back to Highland Lodge. Ritger will help you look and listen for winter birds in addition to pointing out animal tracks. Cost is $187 per person, including lodging and all food.

If you choose to brave it on your own, overnight cost at all three winter huts is $27 per person for members, $30 for non-members.

Twelfth Night Epiphany concert at Abbey

Glastonbury Abbey of Hingham is honored to offer the musical gifts of Walter Rossbach, organist, choral director and tenor soloist of Reston, Va., as he performs an Epiphany Organ Concert at 4 p.m., on Jan. 6, in the Glastonbury Abbey Church. Rossbach has spent 56 years of every Sunday professional performance at liturgical churches in the New York and Northern Virginia/Washington, D.C. areas. He recently retired after serving 12 years as minister of music at Christ the King Lutheran Church in Great Falls, Va. His career spans duties at Episcopal, Roman Catholic and Lutheran churches, and currently includes frequent performances at Arlington National Cemetery's Post Chapel. He is a gifted musician who is renowned for his virtuosity, dynamics and emotionally sensitive registrations that he brings out of the organs on which he performs.

This event promises to be an intimate and joyous close to the Christmas season.

Rossbach has performed numerous concerts and recitals especially in the dedication of new organs. He is one of only two organists to perform on an organ in the White House in the presence of the president (President Jimmy Carter). He enjoys performing before all sizes of Christian congregations and finds his greatest joy in leading the singing of rousing hymns, often improvising reharmonizations, interludes and modulations to heighten the worship experience in song. Rossbach enjoys informal settings for his programs, and will be sharing comments about the music performed during the concert.

A reception will take place at the Abbey Center following the concert where hors d'oeuvres and beverages will be served. This event promises to be an intimate and joyous close to the Christmas season. A good will offering with a minimum suggestion of $25 per family is requested. Tickets will be available at the door on the day of the concert as well as the Glastonbury Abbey bookstore, 16 Hull St., Hingham, prior to Jan. 6. Bookstore hours are Monday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Lifesaving Museum program on lost crew of Portland

Walter Hickey, Archives Specialist at the National Archives Northeast Region will host the program, "Following the Paper Trail: Researching the Lost Crew of the Portland," at 7 p.m., Thursday, Jan. 10, in the Hull Lifesaving Museum at the Point Allerton U.S. Lifesaving Station, 1117 Nantasket Ave. Cost is $3 for members; $5 for nonmembers.

The devastating Portland Gale that struck New England on Nov. 27, 1898, which bears the name of the steamship Portland, was wrecked as she attempted to make the return trip from Boston Harbor to Portland, Maine. With all 192 passengers and crew tragically lost, the Portland is one of the worst disasters in New England maritime history.

The location of the wreck had long been one of the great mysteries of Massachusetts Bay, until recent underwater archaeology efforts at the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary revealed the wreck site. Sadly, much of the Portland's documentation went down with the ship.

The program will cover how dedicated research has helped to solve one of the steamer's many mysteries.

DENNIS B. SULLIVAN
ATTORNEY AT LAW, CPA

BECAUSE YOU HAVE A TRUST... YOU MUST ATTEND THIS FREE WORKSHOP!!!

If you have a trust agreement, I have some bad news for you; your trust is probably outdated. Trusts drafted by many attorneys do not contain the protective provisions we included in our recently developed "Life Plan™". How do I know? Last year I gave numerous workshops throughout the state and will even offer $1,000 to anyone who can present an estate plan that contains all 19 of the protective provisions we currently use when designing a plan. Most estate plans had fewer than 3 of these provisions. Only one estate plan even came close to having all 19 provisions. Consider this...

THIS YEAR YOU ARE SIX TIMES MORE LIKELY TO BECOME DISABLED THAN DIE!

This alarming statistic shouldn't surprise you...you see it every day. Unfortunately, the number of people becoming disabled will double in the next decade. Your trust was designed to deal with death not disability, but that can be corrected.

A LAWSUIT IS FILED EVERY THIRTY SECONDS – MORE THAN 90 MILLION ARE FILED IN THE UNITED STATES EACH YEAR

Your trust can be modified to protect the surviving spouse's interest in the Decedent's estate from frivolous lawsuits. Currently, it is only designed to reduce estate taxes. Would you like it to do both?

MOST POWERS OF ATTORNEY ARE OUTDATED WHEN PRESENTED (MANY ARE NOT EVEN AVAILABLE)

Your Power of Attorney is used to allow someone to act on your behalf when you are disabled. Unfortunately, these documents keep becoming outdated. The comprehensive version we previously used was revised in 3 major areas after the Terri Schiavo case. Assuming your document is current, will it be available in an emergency? Hospitals report in 3 out of 4 cases the Patients' Health Care Proxy is not available when needed. Our new program makes this document accessible 24 hours a day, 7 days a week via the telephone.

IN 2001, MORE YOUNG PEOPLE FILED FOR BANKRUPTCY THAN GRADUATED FROM COLLEGE!

The amount of assets that will be inherited by the next generation is staggering. Unfortunately, the amount our children or beneficiaries will lose due to financial difficulties such as bankruptcy, lawsuits and divorce will be just as staggering. If you could distribute your estate in such a way as to protect your children or beneficiaries from their creditors for life... would you? I would be surprised if you said no. After all, isn't that why your trust was created in the first place?

MOST ESTATES DON'T MAKE IT TO THE GRANDCHILDREN!

If you can protect your estate during the life of your children, then it will be available for your grandchildren. Wouldn't it be nice if your estate, whatever is left, could then transfer estate tax free to your grandchildren? It can, we just need to put the appropriate language in the document.

THE BIGGEST THREAT TO YOUR ESTATE IS NO LONGER PROBATE & TAXES...

IT'S DISABILITY, OUTDATED DOCUMENTS, UNPROTECTED DISTRIBUTIONS...

DUE TO RECENT CHANGES, YOUR LIVING TRUST COULD BECOME A LIVING HELL.

WE HAVE DEVELOPED A SOLUTION FOR EVERY PROBLEM!

ATTEND OUR FREE WORKSHOP

Call our office at 800-964-4295 to reserve seating for this important workshop. During this call we will inform you of the exact location of the workshop. At this workshop you will learn the details about your trust that perhaps your attorney never explained. We'll explain the new laws that directly affect your estate planning documents, and how to take steps to correct these problems. All those in attendance will receive a 19-point checklist for a "self analysis" of their estate planning documents. As a bonus, if you bring this advertisement to the workshop you will receive a FREE REPORT on the new (February 2006) Medicaid Laws. You will discover how to protect your home and assets from increasing medical and nursing home costs, taxes, and the costs and time delays of probate.

The first attendee who submits a disposable, non-returnable, copy of their estate planning documents that do not have any of the problems addressed in this article will receive $1,000! Bring your documents to the workshop for a complimentary 12-15 point written analysis.

YOU CANNOT STOP THE WORLD FROM CHANGING...BUT YOU CAN USE NEW TECHNIQUES TO PROTECT YOU AND YOUR LOVED ONES.

Don't wait until you actually have a problem before you deal with it. By waiting until the problem happens you typically can only minimize the damage, rather than prevent it. Let's prevent it! By attending this FREE workshop you will receive a 19-point review of your existing trust, or a review of your estate planning goals and help creating a personalized plan. We will tell you the areas of vulnerability your estate has and how to protect your assets.

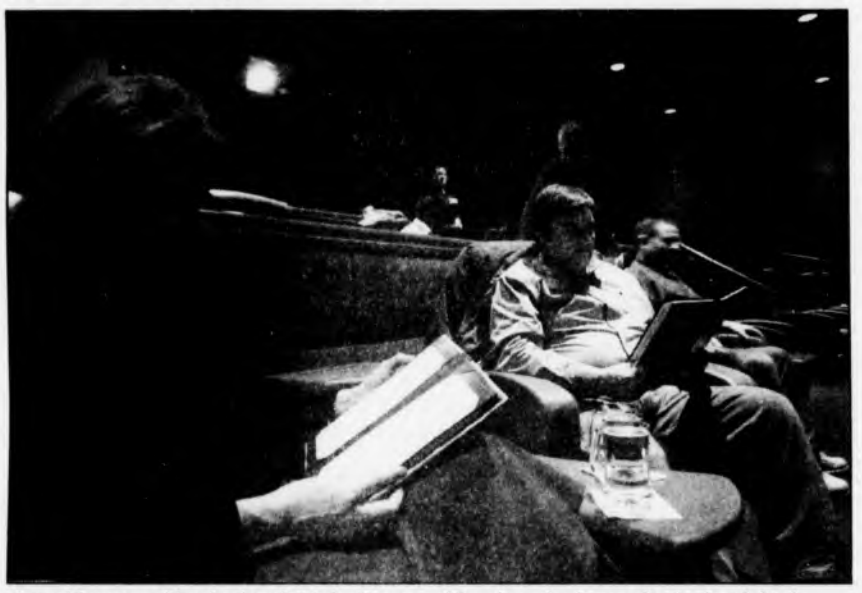
Plenty of extras at Showcase

Pay $10, get luxurious seating, dining, cocktails

A.J. Bauer
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE



Randolph, Mass. - Movie-goers willing to pay an extra $10 at Showcase Cinemas in Randolph will soon gain access to luxurious seating, dining and cocktails as part of a pilot program announced by theater owner National Amusements on Thursday. The pilot program, that began Dec. 26 and expected to last for two months, will seek feedback from customers before the Dedham-based company unrolls the "Lux Level" concept at selected theaters throughout the United States.

Lux Level patrons receive a "preferred" parking service that includes attendants and access to a reserved seating area in the theater, complete with custom-designed seats and dining trays. Patrons in the reserved section also receive a $5 voucher that goes toward food or drinks, served by waitstaff before and during the movie.

Irene Hrovat and her husband, Mirko Hrovat, of Brockton, look over the food and drink menus before a showing of the film "I Am Legend" at the all new Lux Level of the Showcase Cinemas in Randolph.

While regular theater customers will still have their pick of candies and popcorn at the concession stand, Lux Level patrons will have access to a full food and drink menu featuring personal pizzas and gourmet appetizers, as well as beer, wine and cocktails.

The menus are similar to those offered at restaurants at the company's Cinema De Lux theaters, but those restaurants do not serve customers while they are seated during the movies.

Two theaters at Showcase Cinemas have been renovated to include the exclusive sections - one fitted with 42 swivel rocking chairs, the other with 44 love seats.

Customer feedback will determine which of the seating styles will be implemented in the future expansion of the program, according to National Amusements spokeswoman Wanda Whitson.

The Randolph complex was selected because it is the busiest of the company's 118 theaters worldwide, Whitson said.

Nationwide, National Amusements operates 79 indoor movie theaters. Whitson said once the pilot program is over, the Lux Level service will remain in Randolph, and also will be included in theaters to be built in Dedham and at Patriot Place in Foxboro, as well as at theaters in Kentucky and Virginia.

Movie review

'Savages' puts fun in dysfunction

The Savages (B+)

By Al Alexander
FILM REVIEW

Jon (Philip Seymour Hoffman) and Wendy (Laura Linney) Savage get into yet another arguments about each other's quirks.

Like the late, great playwright Tennessee Williams, Tamara Jenkins has a knack for creating nihilistic narcissists you can't help but empathize with.

Yes, you'd cross the street to avoid them. But at a safe distance, like say your seat at the megaloplex, they become fascinating studies of big egos and self-loathing.

Jon and Wendy Savage are two such losers; squabbling siblings who can't stand the sight of each other because, unbeknownst to them, they are mirror images - self-involved know-it-alls oblivious to everyone and everything around them.

They are the center of Jenkins' darkly humorous "The Savages," a film that consistently mines the "fun" in family dysfunction by fashioning a coming-of-age story in which the protagonists, exquisitely inhabited by Laura Linney and Philip Seymour Hoffman, are closer to AARP than MTV.

It's quite a departure from Jenkins' first film, the equally strong "Slums of Beverly Hills," a strangely loving ode to an eccentric, resourceful father (Alan Arkin) who followed an unconventional blueprint for child rearing.

Where that movie was light and frothy, "The Savages" is almost misanthropic, as the estranged siblings are forced to deal with each other after their poor-excuse of a father (Tony-winner Philip Bosco) suddenly finds himself homeless and ravaged by dementia.

Sounds depressing, doesn't it? Just wrong for the holidays? But Jenkins handles the subject matter with so much sharp-witted humor and insight that it's downright life-affirming.

It helps, of course, that Jenkins has three of today's finest actors. But the reason "The Savages" slays is the warmth and compassion her writing breathes into the struggles the Savages encounter as they struggle to adjust to the idea that their once-tyrannical father is now as helpless as a baby.

In that respect, the film is both cathartic and cautionary in taking on the issue that worries just about every middle-aged person: carrying for an incapacitated parent. Jenkins holds nothing back, either, often drawing on her experiences with her own father's death from dementia.

It lends the film a palpable realism that contrasts nicely with the absurdity of Jon and Wendy, and their so-called lives.

He is a theater professor in snowy Buffalo living under the grandiose illusion that his upcoming book on Brecht will make him a star; while she is a failed New York playwright living off temp jobs and various grants meant for the real victims of 9/11.

No surprise: both are single and chasing after paramours they either don't want or can't have. Yet like "Seinfeld's" equally superficial Jerry and George, they suck you in. You root for them to finally wake up and smell the nursing home that could well be their final destinations.

Bringing them so vividly to life would be a strain for most actors, but Linney and Hoffman make it look effortless, each summoning their uncanny ability to create characters that stay with you even longer than the movies they're in.

It's Bosco, though, who leaves them in the dust, lending a quiet dignity to Lenny Savage that shines through even when he's caught in the numerous humiliations of aging.

It's easily one of the bravest, most selfless performances I've seen. He deserves to be remember at Oscar time, and so does "The Savages," with its unflinching look at aging. It shows us the true meaning of what it means to die laughing.

Rated R. "The Savages" contains sexuality and language.

Cohasset joins $19.5 million club

Top dollar for Atlantic Ave. oceanfront estate

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It was only about 10 years ago when a million-dollar home sale in Cohasset was big news for real estate, now a million-dollar home sale in Cohasset is the norm rather than the exception.

In 2004, a $7.3 million dollar residential sale made headlines. Now, Cohasset has a residential home with an asking price of a whopping $19.5 million.

The Cary Point Estate, or 79 Atlantic Ave., is currently listed on the Cohasset-based Dean and Hamilton Realtors website (www.deanandhamilton.com). The five-bedroom mansion is Dean and Hamilton's highest asking price to date and would likely be a residential home record for any South Shore real estate firm, said Dean and Hamilton President and the property's listing agent, Tom Hamilton.

Dean and Hamilton sold the property to its current owner around 2003 for roughly $4.75 million.

"It's been under construction ever since," said Nancy Hamilton, co-listing agent, "it needed a gut job and it got one."

Before the current owner's renovation the house was primarily used during the summer months. Edward C. Cary originally owned the land in the late 1800s, which is how the geographic promontory overlooking Sandy Cove got its name "Cary Point." But, Cary was not the one that built the Mediterranean-style home with its stucco walls and red tile roof, according to local historian and town

Maggie's Corner says goodbye

Route 3A bakery to close this month

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"The hardest part is leaving the people. We have gotten to know kids and families, watched them grow up."
— Maggie Warshaw

It was with a few tea breads and a small shelf for her baked goods in a corner of a Norwell general store that Maggie's Corner got both its name and its start. Now, more than 30 years later, Maggie Warshaw is putting her bakery business on the shelf. She and her business partner and daughter, Jenn, have decided to close their popular Route 3A bakery.

"It's time to try doing something different," says Maggie, but the decision didn't come easily, "it took us about a year."

After unsuccessfully searching for a buyer for close to a year and running into trouble negotiating a new lease, they began to let the news trickle out to their customers toward the end of the holiday season.

"We didn't want people to stop in and just see a closed sign," said Maggie. They hosted a goodbye party this past Sunday.

Maggie's Corner Bakery, 152 King St., has ingrained itself into the fabric of local families' lives over the past three decades — a special birthday cake, a weekly treat of cookies, a morning coffee and muffin with friends or the dessert that steals the show at a holiday party. The Warshaws have been a part of traditions and routines for many in Cohasset and beyond for the last 30 years.

Jenn started helping her mom when she was only six years old. She and her brother would each have a job to do after school, usually simple tasks like peeling carrots or squishing bananas or squeezing lemons. Jenn joined her mother full-time as a business partner about 12 years ago, about the same time they moved from a basement kitchen in Norwell to their expanded retail space in Jonathan Livingston Plaza in Cohasset.

"We're business partners here but back at home we're mother and daughter," says Jenn of their dual relationship. Of course, they admit there have been moments of disagreement but each is quick to acknowledge the other one's strengths.

Maggie is the easy-going baking mastermind who considers creating their trademark chocolate cake a science, says Jenn. While Maggie says it's Jenn's creative, artistic and

Mullaney's Fish Market changes hands

Mullaney's Fish Market has changed hands. New owner, Joseph P. Norton II of Scituate, came before the Board of Selectmen on Monday night to seek a wine and malt liquor license transfer. Although changing hands, the name Mullaney's Fish Market will remain the same. The business is a retail fish market and specialty food store located on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A) in the same plaza as Sea Chest Consignments and Lapels Dry Cleaning.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said the police background check came back with no issues. The Selectmen approved the transfer unanimously.

Red Lion warned over violation

Selectmen request management plan

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Board of Selectmen put the staff and management of the Red Lion Inn on their guard Monday night.

A message of warning was given to the popular Village watering hole after the Board found truth to allegations the Red Lion violated conditions of its liquor license on the night before Thanksgiving (Nov. 21 into Nov. 22).

The liquor license hearing stemmed from police reported incidents of public drinking outside the premises and serving alcohol after 1a.m. The Board of Selectmen heard testimony from the police officers that responded to the incidents, as well as Red Lion Inn staff members.

The formal hearing requires each of the witnesses to testify under oath. The proceeding is not unlike a courtroom proceeding with Police Chief James Hussey, Red Lion Inn counsel and the Selectmen having the chance to ask the witnesses questions.

Police officers Sergeant David Cogill, Lieutenant Bill Quigley and Officer Jeffrey Treanor all responded to the Red Lion Inn on the night before Thanksgiving.

Quigley was the first to observe patrons spilling out of the Red Lion building into the inn's driveway around 11:30p.m. He said he saw several people outside holding beer bottles and plastic cups.

After dispatch was unable to reach a manager by phone, Quigley called for Cogill to assist him in entering the premises to locate a manager. Quigley and Cogill talked with the Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide and the bartender in charge. According to Quigley, the officers requested Ordelheide and then the bartender in charge to ensure patrons were not leaving the premises with alcohol.

"At the time, I felt the manager was addressing (the issue) the best he could," said Quigley, noting the bar in the basement nightclub "the Cave" was extremely busy, with the line at the bar three deep. He also said there was no one controlling people leaving the premises with alcohol. The officers left the Red Lion Inn shortly before midnight.

Around 1a.m. Quigley returned to the Red Lion to find much the same situation: patrons outside the Red Lion and standing room only in the foyer. This time, Officer Treanor accompanied him into the Red Lion Inn. According to Quigley, loud music was coming from the Cave and the bar was in full operation. When he reached the bar, where he still saw alcohol being served (but did not see money changing hands) he radioed dispatch to get the official time from the police department's clock which is hooked into the Naval Observatory. It was 1:13a.m., almost 15 minutes past closing time.

After some conversation with the bar staff, Quigley and the two other officers cleared the establishment. The officers worked with the Red Lion Inn staff to clear the bar. Around 1:40a.m. the officers left the Red Lion. Two patrons outside the Red Lion required police assistance to get home.

Annette Agostino, the manager of record on the Red Lion's liquor license, said she only worked until 11p.m. on the night in question, so she could not testify as to the event that night.

"But I can say since that night we've implemented new things," she said, explaining a second bar manager has been hired to be in charge when she is not there for closing. The Cave has been shut down indefinitely with the exception of a previously booked private party, but in that case a police detail will be hired to prevent further incident.

Agostino brought up her understanding of the law was always last call at 12:30a.m. and all patrons out of the building by 1 a.m.

Although Agostino said common practice at the Red Lion Inn and other area establishments has been last call at 12:30a.m. and the establishment cleared by 1a.m., she has since learned this is not the regulation in Cohasset.

Existing regulations, which go back years, state the closing hour is 1a.m. and last call must be served before then. The tables must be cleared of glasses and bottles by 1:15a.m., then all customers off the premises by 1:30a.m. Town Manager Bill Griffin indicated he'd like the Selectmen to revisit these regulations at a later time.

"Respectfully, I believe no alcohol was served after 1a.m.," said Michael Hayes, President and Treasurer of Cohasset Sarro, Inc. the company owning Red Lion Inn as well as attorney for Ordelheide. However, he said he understood the seriousness of the allegation and as a result changes have been made at the Red Lion.

"We're not trying to diminish this by any stretch of the imagination," said Hayes, "we will work with this board so nothing close to this happens again."

A letter of warning was issued to the Red Lion Inn stating that any future violations of the liquor license would result in more serious consequences, including a suspension or revocation of its liquor license. In addition, the Selectmen required a management plan be submitted for their review and acceptance by Friday, Jan. 18. The plan must address the key issues that led to the violations on Thanksgiving.

The plan must show how the Red Lion will provide a definitive manager in charge every night, how valid identification will be checked, and how patrons will be prohibited from consuming alcohol outside the building. The review of the management plan is tentatively schedules for their meeting on Tuesday, Jan. 22.

Vice Chairman Ted Carr, who resides across the street from the Red Lion Inn, recused himself from the discussion and any votes.

A separate incident alleging the sale of alcohol after 1a.m. on Oct. 26, Hussey said the primary witness could not attend the evening's hearing and requested the allegation be placed on file and not considered in the hearing.

Another more recent incident from the night of Dec. 30 was not part of the hearing due to the requirements of public hearing notice. The police allege a minor was served alcohol and there was public drinking off the premises. But, whether the Board of Selectmen will hold an additional hearing on those alleged violations is yet to be determined.

"I'm not personally in favor of holding that kind of hearing," said Selectmen Chairman Vanderweil after the meeting citing the Red Lion Inn's "spirit of cooperation" in the matter. However, the Board will formally discuss whether another hearing on the Dec. 30 incident is necessary at an upcoming meeting.

Green slimy substance is still a mystery

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The good news is that a green, slimy substance found in the back of two shopping centers last week was not hazardous and was not a petroleum product. However, officials still do not know what it was or where it came from.

"If it had been hazardous, it would have been quite a nightmare," Fire Chief Robert Silvia said.

The incident last Wednesday (Jan. 2) started hours before it was reported to authorities and likely occurred when a trash truck emptied the dumpster at Cohasset Plaza sometime before 6:30 a.m. and then went to Tedeschi Plaza.

When police and fire got the call at about 2:13 p.m., by that time vehicles had been driving through the green stuff all day, Silvia said.

The original call reported the substance at the back of Cohasset Plaza in the back corner (by the old Dunkin Donuts drive through). It is not clear if the substance came from the dumpster or the trash truck that serviced it. The second call reported the same substance behind CVS at Tedeschi Plaza.

The fire department cordoned off both areas and the state HazMat team was called in to investigate.

"They have since told us, 'we cannot tell you what it is – but we can tell you what it isn't,'" Silvia said. "It is good news that it is not hazardous."

The trash company that services the dumpsters returned to cleanup the substance that day and the following day.

The green substance was also on the southbound lane of Route 3A between the two shopping centers. The Department of Environmental Protection and Board of Health were also at the scene. The Cohasset Fire Department served as the lead agency during the incident and kept the substance from reaching any catch basins.

Wedding day

A limousine with a bride and groom parked outside St. Anthony's was struck by a 2004 Ford pickup truck at just before 7 p.m. on New Year's Eve.

The driver of the pickup, a 42-year-old Cohasset man, was checked out at the scene by the fire department.

The police officer that responded to the scene detected alcohol on the operator's breath. Based on the officer's observations, the man was arrested for operating under the influence of alcohol and negligent operation of a motor vehicle. The couple was not injured, Police Chief James Hussey said.

Slipping, sliding

A 1998 Honda Accord operated by a Scituate woman southbound along the bottom of Atlantic Avenue slid on the ice and hit some cement guard posts after it left the roadway, Chief Hussey said. The incident occurred at 11:35 p.m. on New Year's Eve (Dec. 31). No citation was issued and there were no injuries.

On Saturday (Jan. 5) at about 1 p.m., police responded to a single-car accident in the 700 block area of Jerusalem Road. Police said a 1997 Toyota driven by a Hingham resident hit a patch of ice and spun around 180 degrees ending up on top of a low stonewall. A witness confirmed that in her view, the driver was not speeding. No citations were issued and there were no injuries.

FedEx truck

A FedEx truck making a delivery at about 12:20 p.m. on New Year's Eve (Dec. 31) got stuck on temporary water mains on Nichols Road. Some of the water mains were dislocated, Chief Hussey said. The water department made repairs and a tow truck pulled the truck off the tubing, he said.

Receipts missing

A former employee of a pizza take-out restaurant is being summonsed to court on the charge of larceny under $250. The restaurant management claims he did not turn in some cash receipts from deliveries. The former employee claims he did not have any receipts. "The person is being summonsed and we will let the courts decide," Hussey said.

Pocketbook stolen

Police are investigating the apparent theft of a woman's pocketbook from the front seat of her car that was parked at Shaw's. The incident was reported at about 7 p.m. on Dec. 31. Police said the woman went into the market with a bankcard and left her pocketbook in the car. She went home to double check that she had not left it at home. There was no forced entry to her car, so the woman who lives in Cohasset, thinks she may have left her car unlocked.

Trespass order

A Cohasset man is being summonsed to court on a trespassing charge after he allegedly went to a part of the property on which he is not allowed, police said. The incident is part of a landlord-tenant dispute that involves an eviction, police said. The landlord took out a no-trespass order to keep the tenant off other parts of the property and he allegedly violated that order.

Two bikes found

Police have picked up two abandoned bicycles and brought them to the station. One is a blue/silver Kettler Light Rider (a newer model) and the other is a child-sized mountain bike that is blue and was hand-painted.

Police collected the bikes after a resident told them they had been left in the same spot for a period of time.

Revoked license

A 41-year-old Scituate man is being summonsed to court for driving after license revocation at about 6 p.m. on Saturday (Jan. 5). An officer on radar patrol on Forest Avenue stopped the 1998 Lincoln Continental that the man was driving when it was clocked as going 46 mph in a posted 30 mph zone.

A license check revealed he had a revoked license due to an out-of-state matter, police said. He was also cited for speeding and his car was towed.

MV vandalism

Police are investigating several incidents of vandalism to motor vehicles in the Jerusalem Road/Hull Street area near West Corner last week. A couple of the incidents looked as though the windows of the cars were shot with a BB gun. In another incident both car mirrors were damaged; the driver's side mirror was completely broken off and a piece of the passenger-side mirror was snapped off, police said.

No new sewer connections available for Cohasset village

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Development in the village for the near future looks bleak. Sewer Commission Chairman Sean Cunning laid the facts on the table about sewer capacity at the Planning Board meeting Wednesday night: additional capacity for the village development will not be available for likely five years.

Despite the hard fought victory for the village zoning bylaws, which establish parameters for expansions, entirely new buildings, more apartments and stores, development will largely have to wait for additional sewer capacity.

Cunning reported the central sewer district, which includes the village, has reached its capacity and new connections to town sewer may not be possible until the earliest 2012.

The last dozen available connections were recently given to two village parcels, the Samuel Bates House (35-39 S. Main St.) and the Cohasset Hardware building (40 S. Main St.), Cunning said. Due to relatively new sewer regulations, in order to keep the capacity the connections need to be paid for in full six months from being granted. Right now, there is a 25 deep waiting list for sewer connections in the central district.

"I see the line moving, but not very much," said Cunning.

The delay is largely due to the ongoing Little Harbor sewer project; the $15.2 million sewer distribution and plant expansion will tie-in an additional 485 homes to town sewer. The distribution project is expected to be complete in 2009/2010. Then after homeowners hook up to the sewer, the Sewer Commission will have to re-evaluate the capacity and see if any more connections are available. The associated sewer plant upgrade and expansion will increase the capacity from its current 300,000 gallons per day to 450,000 gallons per day.

"We don't really see adding anyone else to the sewer until the plant is up and running. It looks like five years before we can add capacity," said Cunning.

In addition to the central sewer district waiting list, a second list has been started for the Little Harbor district. Developers or landowners of empty lots looking to build will have to wait until after the 485 homes are connected.

"Developers coming in they might not get a connection for ten years," said Cunning.

Connections are measured in equivalent dwelling units, or EDUs. When a connection is granted, the property owner had six months to pay for the connection in full. The cost can run from about $8,300 for houses or businesses with increased capacity needs (such as adding apartments) to $15,000 for new construction. At the end of six months, if the connection is not paid for in full, the property owner may file for an few months extension or the connection can be put back into the town's inventory.

Several Village property owners have their name on the waiting list, said Cunning. Some buildings seeking connections include the recently rebuilt 22 Depot Court and the village gas station. Not among those on the waiting list is the Red Lion Inn, although the owner has brought preliminary plans for a 32-unit expansion before the Board of Selectmen.

The Sewer Commission is actively looking to purchase back un-used sewer connections throughout the central sewer district. A future Town Meeting article will seek to allow the Sewer Commission to buy back the sewer capacity where it is available.

Looking on the bright side Moore said, "it doesn't look like there will be uncontrollable development."

Staging a decision

ZBA to deliberate next month on Jerusalem Road area

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"The point is the lease is with a private entity there are ways this could have been done right, this was done wrong."
— Rich Henderson, attorney for appellant

Is the Little Harbor water and sewer project staging area operated by the town?

The Zoning Board of Appeals will begin to deliberate on this key question at its meeting next month. After three public hearing sessions, stretched out since November, the ZBA closed the public hearing portion of the appeal process Tuesday night and will begin deliberating at next month's meeting (date to be determined).

"I would hope we could deliberate and decide next month," said ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick in a phone interview, "because of the complexity of the issue, it's going to take some time."

The ZBA heard another full hour of testimony and evidence at this week's meeting. Since the early fall, the town's contractor for the large project, L M Holdings, has been using a small parcel at 198 Jerusalem Road as their home base for operations. The Building Inspector Bob Egan gave a verbal go ahead to use the site before work began, but Eileen Craven of 6 Nichols Road appealed his decision to bring the issue before the Zoning Board.

The parcel of Jerusalem Road was largely chosen because of its proximity to the construction area around Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue. If the staging area is forced to move as a result of this appeal, the $15.2 million project could face delays and additional cost. Residents of Little Harbor, many of them with failing septic systems, have waited years to be hooked up to town sewer.

However, the ZBA is solely focused on if the staging area is allowed under the town's zoning bylaws. The zoning bylaws allow the staging-area use in a residential district if the town or other governmental agency is operating the use of the property. Showing the town is or is not in operational control of the site is the pivotal issue.

In an apparent effort to clear up any confusion or language misinterpretation regarding the staging area and the town's involvement with it, a memorandum of agreement between the three parties involved in the staging area — the town, the contractor (L M Holdings) and Leland and Leonora Jenkins, the owners of the staging area property on 198 Jerusalem Road. Representatives from all three parties signed the agreement on Dec. 20 and submitted it to the ZBA.

"It's a simple clarification agreement of what the intention of the contracts are," said project manager Dan Coughlin of Coughlin Environmental. Coughlin's firm is overseeing the project on behalf of the town and its central office is located in the secure staging area.

Coughlin hoped the simplified language would "put the issue to bed" and make clear the town is operating the site. He described the one-page document as containing the facts understood and accepted by all parties involved. Coughlin stressed the memo defines the town's involvement with the staging area.

"Cohasset has operational and legal control over the parcel for the duration of the contract," states the memo.

However, Zoning Board member Kathleen Hunter had doubts about the legality and influence of the document. First, she did not have copies of both contracts clarified with the memo. She was provided with a copy of the town's contract with L M Holdings, but the Zoning Board was not provided with a copy of the lease agreement for the property at 198 Jerusalem Road. Before the close of the hearing, Leland Jenkins said he would provide the ZBA with a copy of the lease.

Second, after reading the town's contract with L M Holdings she found several conflicting items between the clarification document and the contract itself. Third, the memo indicated it was not amending or adding to the existing contracts, it was "solely for the purpose of clarity." She argued the memorandum of agreement would not prevail over the contract, if ever questioned in court.

Counsel for the appellant Rich Henderson did not find merit in the document, describing it as "self-serving" and "absurd." He returned to the fact brought up in previous hearings that the contract to lease the land was a private contract between L M Holdings and the landowner with no town involvement.

"The point is the lease is with a private entity," said Henderson, "there are ways this could have been done right, this was done wrong."

Craven, the appellant, said any issue she has had with the project, from the lease contract to traffic tie-ups, she has been referred to L M Holdings for an answer, not the town.

Henderson argued the town was trying to have it both ways: by disassociating itself with the staging area at the start of the project but now, once under appeal, is trying to establish its operational control over the staging area.

Coughlin likened the private lease for the staging area parcel to any one of the contractor's agreements with vendors, "those are his tools to turn a profitable job, we don't ask for his vendor information."

The ZBA voted to close the public hearing on the appeal preventing further new evidence from coming before the board, with the exception of the Jenkins' lease contract with L M Holdings and a memo from Henderson outlining his client's standing in the case.

In early February, date to be determined, the ZBA will begin their deliberation on staging area appeal. All meetings are posted at the Town Hall outside the Town Clerk's office.

Village zoning bylaw amendment proposed

A majority of voters at Town Meeting placed their confidence in the Planning Board to review new development in the village business district. But even after the vote, the Zoning Board of Appeals was left with the authority to grant special permits for proposed changes on non-conforming parcels in the village business district.

Tom Callahan, as a private citizen, drafted a amendment to the zoning bylaw to eliminate this inconsistency and streamline the approval process in the village.

"This closes the one loophole in jurisdiction," said Callahan. Although the Planning Board and others realized this loophole while drafting the village zoning bylaw amendments, it was not included on the warrant due to the conflict over the jurisdiction issue as a whole with the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The Planning Board quickly placed their support behind the proposal with not much discussion. Planning Board member Bob Sturdy said the proposal made sense to make the non-conforming parcel's special permits a part of the site plan review process with the Planning Board.

As the bylaws are now, there is a dual approval process for non-conforming buildings in the village business district. The applicant must go before the Planning Board for a site plan review, then the Zoning Board to be granted a special permit. The proposed amendment will streamline the process for non-conforming parcels to be like all other parcels in the village, and the applicant will only need to go before the Planning Board.

A state statute give the municipality the authority to place the special permit granting authority in either the Planning Board or the Zoning Board of Appeals. In recent years, the town has empowered the Planning Board with permit granting authority for the transit-oriented district, cluster development and new construction in the village.

With a vote 3-0 (members Mike Westcott and Stuart Ivimey were not present) the Planning Board supported the article and said it would submit it for the upcoming Annual Town Meeting (March 29) warrant.

Perc testing town parcel

Finding lots to convert or build affordable housing on is the primary focus of the Housing Partnership Committee. To that end, the Partnership is seeking the Board of Selectmen's approval to perc test a town-owned parcel located between Smith Place and Osgood School.

The Housing Partnership expressed interest in doing this preliminary test at a meeting over the summer, but never received a formal go-ahead. The test will determine whether the lot is buildable.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer asked whether they should first determine if the site is something the town would go for, but Town Manager Bill Griffin said this was only a threshold effort to establish if the site is even feasible.

The Selectmen requested to see a map of the town-owned property before giving the approval. They will re-visit the topic at next week's meeting, Monday, Jan. 14.

No skating at Lily Pond

Water Comm. needs to address manganese issue

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

There will be no skating on Lily Pond this winter.

The loss of the traditional pastime for Cohasset residents who annually skate and ice fish on the pond has been upsetting for some.

"It's a shame," said Bill Ketchum, a 25-year resident and skater of Lily Pond, "it's been used for well over 100 years as an outdoor recreation area."

After writing a letter to the Mariner last week, Ketchum received several phone calls from residents agreeing with him.

"To me, [Lily Pond] is the heart of winter activity in Cohasset, there's nothing better," he said, adding alternatives to closing the pond should have been explored, or at least there should have been a public hearing on the issue, "they could have done this another way."

For this winter, he plans to use the Hingham Skating Club on East Street, just over the Cohasset line to skate — once the weather returns to freezing temperatures.

The Water Commission feels bad their new aeration system is preventing Lily Pond from being used for its normal winter activities; but it is firm in its decision.

"Our essential responsibility as the Water Commission is to provide good clean tap water to our customers and with the manganese problem we're not doing that," said Water Commissioner John McNabb in a phone interview.

The Water Commission has said the "manganese problem," or more specifically increased levels of manganese in the water, have caused bouts of discolored water in taps all over town. After nearly a year of researching possible solutions to the manganese issue, the installation of an aeration system was the most cost effective and immediate solution. The system cost about $20,000, said McNabb.

The in-pond aeration system consists of five aeration disks installed in the deeper sections of Lily Pond. The introduction of oxygen to the pond will help prevent the manganese from being dissolved in the raw water. The result will be less manganese in the raw water entering the plant and thereby less manganese in the water leaving the plant. The manufacturer of the aeration system claims the system could result in an 80 to 90 percent reduction in manganese, said McNabb.

"The timing is unfortunate but necessary," said McNabb in a phone interview, "it was the one thing we could do so we did it."

Signs were posted warning residents of the unsafe ice in the past few weeks. They have heard from a few upset residents and several residents have been asked to get off the ice despite the signs, said McNabb.

The installation could not wait until the spring because of the need to get four seasons worth of data on how the system affects the amount of manganese in the water. The problem is worst in the summer months, so that is why McNabb said its highly unlikely Lily Pond will have to be closed another winter.

Currently, the Water Department is concluding testing on the aeration system and it should be running full-time as early as next week. But, the Water Department would need to collect at least 60 to 90 days of data before any indication the system is working is apparent, said McNabb. Further, the results won't be seen in the distribution system until the springtime. Once the weather turns a bit warmer, the Water Department will undertake a rigorous flushing regiment to clear the pipes of any built up residue of manganese and other particles, said McNabb.

The subject of Lily Pond's closure came up during Monday night's Board of Selectmen meeting. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer brought up he has heard from several people who are disappointed Lily Pond cannot be skated on this year due to the newly installed aeration system.

"I have to wonder if the timing is really the right thing to do," said Dormitzer.

In past meetings, Dormitzer has relayed complaints from residents regarding dirty water coming out of the tap in various neighborhoods in town. But, now the frequent calls have subsided and he said much of the problem could have been due to construction work on the water distribution system.

Chairman Gary Vanderweil said his understanding was the Water Commission has noticed an increased percentage of manganese in the water due to system changes and needed to begin to solve the problem, then joked "are you receiving more complaints on manganese or on skating?"

Town Manager Bill Griffin explained it was the Water Commission's intent to have this season be the only winter season Lily Pond is closed.

"Other ponds may be utilized for this winter," said Selectman Fred Koed. Once Cohasset returns to normal New England January weather, Elm's Meadow on Cushing Street, the Common duck pond, as well as the Hingham Skating Club on East Street near the Cohasset/Hingham line are traditionally used for skating.

Olivieri named publisher

Mark Olivieri

Mark Olivieri has been named publisher of GateHouse Media's South Shore weekly publishing group.

Richard Daniels, chief operating officer of GateHouse Media New England, announced the appointment last Friday. Olivieri is currently the South Shore group's advertising director and assumed his new duties effective immediately. At the same time, Daniels announced that Mark Skala, editor-in-chief for GateHouse Media's South Shore and Cape Cod groups, has been named publisher for Cape Cod.

Olivieri, a longtime advertising executive on the South Shore and Boston markets, said he is looking forward to new challenges as publisher.

"I've called the South Shore home for more than a decade and I value the region's vibrancy and people," Olivieri said. "Our readers and advertisers have come to depend on the community newspapers which serve this area. We have a great audience, and combined with our talented South Shore GateHouse team, it's a winning combination. In addition, community newspapers are being strengthened by our Wicked Local properties, which will allow us to serve our readers and advertisers in any to meet their needs."

Daniels said Olivieri's considerable talents and experience in community publishing made him a natural choice for the newly created position on the South Shore.

"We are very fortunate to start off 2008 putting a talented and energetic person such as Mark in our group publisher role," Daniels added.

Olivieri will oversee all the South Shore's operations, including the print and Wicked Local online efforts.

Olivieri is active in the Scituate community where he makes his home with his wife, Christine, and children, Christopher and Grace.

Skala said he would miss working with readers, community members and dedicated staffers who have helped him during this stewardship on the South Shore.

"These are quality papers and our team has never lost sight of the fact that our readers and customers come first," he said. "In the end that is what it is all about. We journalists are mere stewards of the papers serving these communities."

Olivieri can be reached by e-mail at molivier@cnc.com or by phone at 781-837-4504.

The stucco and red tile house was built between 1903 and 1904 on Cary Point, a promontory off of Atlantic Ave. In the last few years, the current owner gutted the home, winterized it and added custom detailing at every pass. The house is now offered for sale at $19.5 million, possibly a record for the South Shore real estate.

Cohasset joins $19.5 million club

archivist David Wadsworth. Between 1903 and 1904, Mrs. Henry Lee, then owner of the estate, tore down the Cary's original shingle style home to construct the current home.

"This house has a lot of history," said Wadsworth, listing off the various past owners, which include noted oceanographer and one of the founders of Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute, Henry Bigelow.

Understanding the historical significance of the home, the Hamiltons say their client paid close attention to the historical elements of the home, "it preserves the best of the old but added a lot of the new," said Tom Hamilton.

The stucco exterior and red tile roof that has been a landmark for boaters traveling into Cohasset Harbor were updated and left intact. An antique copper bathtub once found in the master suite was saved and re-located to another bathroom in the home.

New floors, new windows, new radiant heating system, and a new state-of-the-art video, audio and lighting system are just a few of the recent updates.

Much of the renovation has been custom designed and built. The red roof tiles were each handmade to match the ones they replaced. The kitchen counter is embedded with semi-precious gemstones. Each window, custom-made from mahogany and adorned with metal accents in curves and circles mirror the movement of the ocean.

"Everything is custom-done and very high end" with meticulous attention to detail, said Tom Hamilton.

Modern amenities and details were added as well. For example, in addition to a heated three-car detached garage, there is a two-car garage with direct access to the kitchen with a turntable floor so the owner never has to back out of the garage again.

The renovations factored heavily in the new asking price set by the current owner, said Nancy Hamilton. The listing has already attracted at least one serious party to make inquiries on the property and it's only been on the market for two weeks, said Tom Hamilton.

"We're not guaranteeing to sell the property for that price," said Nancy Hamilton, but she explains the price is justified given the amount of work that has gone into the property since it was last purchased—and the amenities the work has added to the property.

Other highlights include five fireplaces; an octagonal solarium/dining room looking out toward the ocean; hardwood floors throughout the home; a water sculpture in a reflecting pool; and the list goes on.

The Cary Point estate recently underwent significant renovation. It boasts five bedrooms, four and a half baths, five fireplaces, an octagonal solarium/dining room looking out toward the ocean, hardwood floors throughout the home, a water sculpture in a reflecting pool, heated three-car garage and a two-car garage with turntable floor.

"Very few other homes have the privacy on the ocean side this home has."

— Tom Hamilton, Dean & Hamilton Realtors

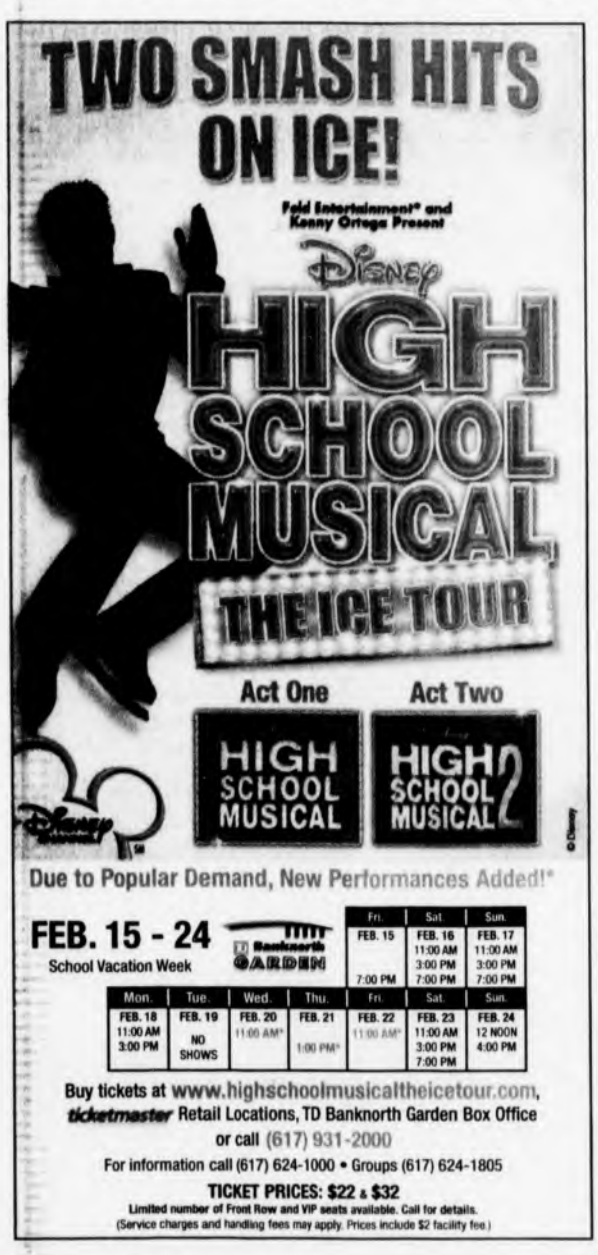
Beyond the walls of the five-bedroom, four-and-half bath home is one of the most spectacular uninhibited ocean views in Cohasset and, arguably, in New England. A gazebo perched on the edge of the property, a bocce court and a Jacuzzi offer the perfect place to spend a summer evening.

Beyond the walls of the five-bedroom, four-and-half bath home is one of the most spectacular uninhibited ocean views in Cohasset and, arguably, in New England. An outside dining patio and a gazebo perched on the edge of the property offer the perfect place to view the sunset. The property has access to not one, but two private beaches, as well as two deep-water moorings. As an added amenity, the owner is offering his 46-foot Sunseeker powerboat along with the estate.

"Very few other homes have the privacy on the ocean side this home has," said Tom Hamilton.

With a price bordering on $20 million, Dean and Hamilton has the job of targeting a small group of wealthy potential buyers — the type of buyer featured on an episode of "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous."

To attract the next owner of the Cary Point estate, Dean and Hamilton is employing a multi-pronged marketing strategy to increase the visibility of the home to an international level. The property is positioned as a unique and distinctive home on multiple websites. They have a virtual tour of the home and its six-acre grounds on their website. It is posted as a "premium listing" on uniquehomes.com.



"I feel comfortable saying the buyer will be someone from out of town, or likely out of the country, who has seen the home on the internet," says Nancy Hamilton. In fact, she says the current owner came upon the property on the internet and purchased the property sight unseen.

Other homes in Cohasset could go for multi-million dollar price tags, similar to Cary Point asking price, says Tom Hamilton — if they ever were ever put on the market. The Roy Estate and the recently re-built Whitehead Island home, both prominent Cohasset Harbor properties are in that category, he said. Currently, the Lions Gate estate off South Main Street is offered at $8 million.

This is all speculation, but if the house were sold for its $19.5 million asking price a standard 30-year mortgage at a 5.75 percent interest rate the monthly payments would be over $110,000.

The property is currently assessed at just over $4 million, but the Hamiltons said the assessors have not returned to the property since renovation was completed. The current property taxes hover around $42,000, but will likely go up once a sale is made.

"It's an absolute showplace," said Nancy Hamilton, "all the work is completely done, all the buyer has to do is move their furniture in."

Heating safety during winter months

By Robert D. Silvia
COHASSET FIRE CHIEF

It's a cold winter night. You decide to use a space heater, or perhaps light a fire in the fireplace, to save on the heating bill. Comfortable from its warmth as bedtime approaches you think, "What harm could it cause to leave it on overnight?"

Think again. While these heating devices may help you feel cozy and warm, they can become extremely dangerous if not used properly. Home heating equipment was involved in an estimated 62,000 home fires in 2005, according to the nonprofit National Fire Protection Association. The cost of these fires is more than just property damage. The cost includes roughly 700 lives and roughly 1,500 injuries.

Home heating fires are largely preventable when you know the rules. The Cohasset Fire Department's goal is to reduce the number of home-heating fires in our community. But we need your help. We are urging Cohasset families to use extra caution this winter when heating your home.

The majority of heating fire deaths are caused by space heaters! Most heating fires are caused by creosote build-up in the chimney.

To help keep our community safe and warm this season, the Cohasset Fire Department recommends that you follow these guidelines:

- Space heaters need space. Keep all things that can burn, such as paper, bedding or furniture, at least 3 feet away from heating equipment.
- Turn portable heaters off when you go to bed or leave the room.
- Plug power cords only into outlets with sufficient capacity and never into an extension cord.
- Inspect for cracked, frayed or broken plugs or loose connections. Replace before using.
- Have your chimney inspected each year and cleaned if necessary.
- Use a sturdy fireplace screen.
- Allow ashes to cool before disposing. Dispose of ashes in a metal container.
- Install smoke alarms in every bedroom, outside each sleeping area and on every level of the home. For the best protection interconnect all smoke alarms throughout the home – when one sounds, they all sound. Test smoke alarms at least once a month.
- Install and maintain a carbon monoxide alarm in a central location outside each sleeping area.
- Never use an oven to heat your home.

With simple precautions, help us meet our goal of decreasing home-heating fires this winter.

Briefly

More candidates pull papers

It looks as if there will be at least one race in this year's town election. So far, four candidates have pulled papers to run for Library Trustee and there are only three three-year positions available. If all return papers, George Haley of 119 Pleasant Street and Mary Lou Lawrence of 15 Beach St. could vie for a seat with incumbents Rodney Hobson of 31 Deep Run and Sheila Evans of 72 North Main Street. Citizens are not considered candidates until they return their papers with the required signatures.

Three-term Selectman Fred Koed pulled papers to run for re-election. Robin Lawrence, a sitting Board of Health member, and Mary Granville, a current member of the Board of Assessors, have also pulled papers to run for re-election. Current chairman of the Water Commission Glenn Pratt pulled papers to run for re-election.

Positions available for the 2008 town election include: Selectmen — two for three-year positions; Moderator — one three-year position; Town Clerk - one three-years position; School Committee — one three-year position; Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three three-year positions; Assessor—one three-year position; Board of Health — one three-year position; Planning Board — one for five-year position and one three-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Recreation Commission - one five-year position; Sewer Commission-one three-year position; and Water Commission — one three-year position.

1895 Christmas fire could have destroyed Cohasset Village

By David Wadsworth
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On the night of Dec. 26, 1895, during a winter gale, Cohasset Center had a fire of major proportions and the village business district was perilously close to being destroyed.

At that time the center had several large, wooden structures including an inn called the Norfolk House; also the large house belonging to Dr. Charles B Bridgham, the large, house owned by C.F.B. Tilden, the nearby Tilden stable; an extensive business block belonging to Joseph St. John, which included the town's post office, a barn owned by Frank Brown and the house and barn of E. E. Ellms. All of these structures except the St. John block were located in the area between South Main Street and the railroad tracks that ran just to the west of the center.

In addition there were two dozen other stores and residences in the locale of the center. It was the barn of farmer Edward Everett Ellms that burst into flames that night in 1895.

In that era few people in Cohasset journeyed outside of their houses on a cold winter's night, so it was some time before the blaze was discovered. At 9:45 p.m., a passerby saw the town's center brightly illuminated by the unmistakable glare of a well-advanced conflagration. The dread cry of "fire" was raised, and startled residents ran to the scene. They saw the barn of E.E. Ellms engulfed in flames with sparks and burning brands raining down upon the rooftops of other nearby buildings.

A disaster of major proportions seemed imminent. The entire center of the village appeared ready to burst into flames. Not far away on the east side of South Main Street, the Independence Fire Company, headquartered at the Independence Station, now the Historical Society's Gown Museum, received the word and went into action immediately.

In that era few people in Cohasset journeyed outside of their houses on a cold winter's night, so it was some time before the blaze was discovered.

Hoses were laid from the town's recently installed fire hydrants. The hand-tub pumper of the fire company was dragged into position near the Norfolk House to assist in maintaining water pressure. But the old hand-tub was not needed; water flowing downhill from the reservoir atop Lincoln Hillside produced more pressure in the hoses than even the pumper engine itself could produce. The struggle by firemen and volunteers to save the village began. Other buildings were ignited by the stream of sparks and burning brands raining down upon rooftops.

Dr. Bridgham's house and barn erupted into flames on the roof several times; each time they were extinguished by the doctor himself, along with his hired man and firemen. Volunteer townspeople formed bucket brigades to extinguish new blazes threatening other buildings.

At 10:30 p.m., three quarters of an hour after the discovery of the fire, the St. John block, hundred of yards away near Cohasset Common, became involved with flames shooting from its roof. Members of the fire company were hurriedly dispatched and succeeded in subduing that dangerous new fire. The St. John block was saved by quick work done by the firemen.

Frank Brown's barn, only a few yards from the ill-fated Ellms structure, was saved by pouring water on it continually. So was E.E. Ellms' house nearby. Dr. Bridgham's residence suffered a large hole burned through its roof, but still stood.

By midnight the fire company and volunteer townspeople succeeded in bringing the conflagration under control. The Ellms barn was totally destroyed. Six cows and one horse stabled within the barn perished, along with other livestock, but there was no loss of human life.

The Independence Fire Company remained at the scene to pour streams of water on the smoking ruins until long after daybreak the following morning. By then the exhausted firemen and volunteers knew they had saved the village. The fire company had proven its worth and the effectiveness of the town's carefully engineered water supply system had demonstrated the wisdom of its designers. Some of the present older buildings in Cohasset Center today owe their existence to the acts of courage done by the townspeople on that cold December night in 1895. The St. John block was torn down some years later, but the houses of Dr. Bridgham and E.E. Ellms still stand side by side on South Main Street and today contain modern shops and apartments.

Thanks for speaking up

Before 2008 gets too far along, we still have some important 2007 business to attend to.

Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter-to-the-editor or penned a commentary to the Cohasset Mariner in 2007.

A few wrote thank you notes to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject, putting pen to paper to share your views with your fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

So here at the Mariner, we salute the following citizens:

The editorial pages of the Cohasset Mariner belong to you. It's where you can speak out or just say thank you to a citizen or group that went beyond the call of duty.

Sometimes it takes a good dose of courage to let your voice be heard, but we think it's worth it. Often one voice is all the inspiration needed to propel others to action.

Last year, the Cohasset Mariner received 154 letters from 118 different people, groups or organizations.

To those of you that have thought about writing and haven't, please reconsider. To those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing!

There are lots of weeks to go in the New Year — which will be filled with events, decisions, happenings and controversy. Let us hear what you think in 2008.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Self-interest vs. public interest

TO THE EDITOR:

Whether the staging area for the sewer and water project is permitted remained unresolved at the ZBA meeting Jan. 8. Although it clearly is an essential, integral and enabling component of a municipal betterment project, and not a commercial endeavor, the hang-up is some language in the bylaw that seems to require determination of whether the town or the contractor is in control.

Granted that the ZBA may not be free to consider the public interest as paramount (which is to get on with the job and avoid the expense and delay of relocation to a more remote site from which the longer travel distance to the work would discombobulate far more people than the current site); the ZBA is constrained to confirming conformance (or otherwise) to all the legal or procedural nits. Of course, counsel for the protesting abutter is doing his job by identifying the nits that can be questioned.

The Planning Board attitude seems to have been determined to some extent by the non-objective rhetoric of one member concerned with effect on his property values and general disturbance in his neighborhood, and then validated by declaring it a commercial venture, and exacerbating the traffic hazards of the site. That a more remote location only increases the number of traffic hazards and the number of residents affected seems not to have had any weight against the rhetoric. Surely, a properly functioning and responsible Planning Board would have given more mature consideration to the larger issues, and less to the angst of one member (who should have recused himself).

In principle, rules should not be ignored for the public or private convenience, else law and order would be eroded. But of course they are, usually rationally rather than irresponsibly, and our society survives. Those who preach for strict adherence forget that the rules often are imperfect and in some cases have unintended and harmful consequences, or that often rules can be interpreted to be either harmful or beneficial.

In defense of Colonial Heights, Va.

TO THE EDITOR:

Just a cotton-picking minute there, Mr. Henshaw, (Dec. 27 column) before you spin off any more snide remarks about Colonial Heights, the upper crust of Petersburg, Va. At the time of your wicked, noisy, speeding down Highway #1, I was trying to sleep two inches away in half of a filling station, whose owner having concluded there was more money in renting to the military from Camp Lee than in pumping his small allowance of gas, had divided the space. Our half included what had been the Men's Room – with the usual facilities. Our neighbors had the Ladies. Our main space was over the grease pit.

Our only complaint was the night traffic. Some of it from "Chicken-in-the-Rough" across the street (chicken, biscuits and honey, $1) but later and far worse from late night celebrators roaring home.

Colonial Heights was nice. There was a small pond, Lake Jordan, where on summer weekends for 25 cents, the military could shed rank, along with clothes, and take a rest from saluting each other.

There were lots of MPs strolling the downtown streets in congenial pairs, but I never saw a civilian cop. They must have all been on the night shift, lying in wait for lawless Yankees like you.

Art of the thank you note is not lost in Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

I can't stress the value of a simple "thank you" enough. In addition to be being a common courtesy, you are conveying that the value of another person's time or effort is understood and appreciated. However, expressing appreciation has seemingly become a lost art. Unless of course, you live in Cohasset!

The Cohasset Education Foundation would like to thank all who participated in their Teacher Appreciation Program, Extra Credit this holiday season to show teachers the appreciation they so richly deserve. Your gifts not only recognized a job well done, but also provided much needed funds for professional development.

Tap water should make a comeback

TOWARD A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JOANN MIRISE

In typical New Year's fashion, the news has been filled with those ubiquitous articles remembering 2007. There was a piece in the Globe last week that featured a series of local Boston personalities answering the question "What are you "so over" from 2007?" My favorite response, by artist Rachel Perry Welty, was "I'm so over bottled water. . . It's an embarrassment on many levels." Her words stuck with me.

I drank bottled water for years. In my office in San Francisco it was free. Oodles of bottles were stacked in the refrigerator. For those of us who demanded room temperature water there were neat rows of bottles on the counter. Sometimes I only drank half of the bottle and used the rest to water my plants. I often refilled my single serving water bottles from the bigger five-gallon dispensers to prevent some waste. And I always recycled my bottles. This helped ease my conscious, at least on the surface.

When I moved to Cohasset, I had so habituated to the bottled water lifestyle that I didn't even consider not subscribing to a water delivery service. The tens of millions of dollars spent annually by corporations to convince us (often erroneously) that our tap water is not to be trusted worked, at least on me and the millions of other people that

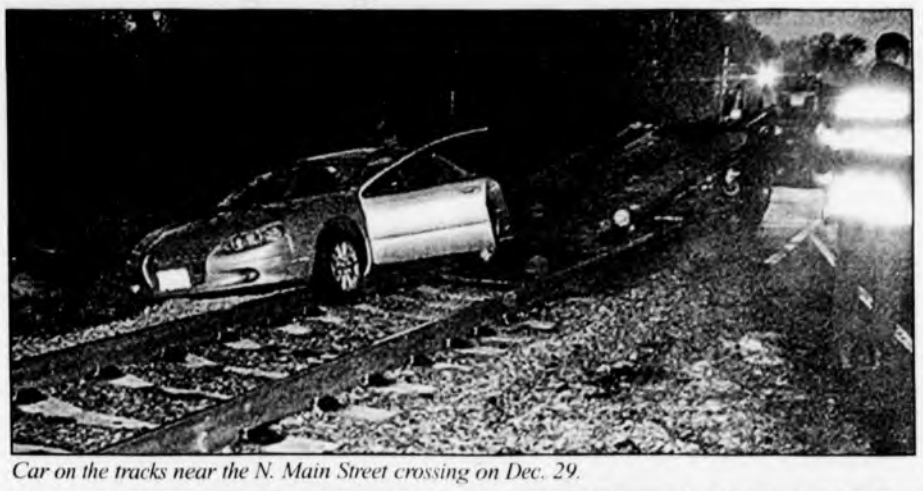
Critical road striping at crossing

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN



Greenbush – We have spoken numerous times about periodic incidents that have occurred at the North Main Street Greenbush crossing. Periodically, cars, for some reason, have driven off of the roadway and driven onto the tracks. The most recent incident happened on Saturday, Dec. 29. As you may recall, it was a foggy evening. The driver reported that the visibility was limited and he followed the lines at the edge of the road, which in fact were not at the edge of the road but the edge of the tracks. It was following these lines parallel to the severely angled tracks that led the driver onto the tracks. This car was the fifth instance that someone has done this. Had this incident happened on a weekday rather than a Saturday, there would have been a southbound train approaching the car from Hingham in the fog. We shudder to think what could have happened. So, that's the problem.

Now, for the solution: On Friday, Jan. 4th Town officials had a meeting at the N. Main Street crossing with the critical Greenbush project personnel, MBTA Commuter Rail top management, the Massachusetts DPU, who oversees the railroad crossings in Massachusetts, as well as the Federal Rail Administration. Seventeen people clustered around the site as we explained the situation. We had been asking the MBTA to repaint some of the lines at the crossing to reduce the driver confusion in low visibility conditions since last July. At this meeting, the Greenbush project personnel committed to repaint the critical road striping during the week of Jan. 7th, if the weather permits.

On another related subject, Greenbush ridership appears to have leveled off. As you know, we are in the habit of taking ad hoc surveys at the Cohasset station parking lot as an informal way to determine whether the ridership is up, down or about the same. Monday of this week, on the Jan. 7th, we took another reading of cars in the parking lot.

Forest Avenue stuff – The first snows and freezing weather this winter has hit our new street paving and sidewalk project on Forest Avenue. Several things have happened some predictably and there are some surprises. For those of us who already have sidewalks we are familiar with both the good and not so good of the DPW's sidewalk plow. Yep, they do a pretty good job of clearing the snow from the walk. But, the plows also tend to move the snow into driveways and driveway aprons. Unfortunately, this is an unavoidable result of the plowing, especially with heavy snows.

We have also noticed that there are several places where water drains out of the ground across the new sidewalk into the street and freezes. We suspect that some of these are natural and nearly unavoidable. Some may be the result of gutter drains or sump pumps that now show up with the nice new sidewalk and road. This latter instance is for the homeowner to resolve. In any event, it is the responsibility of each homeowner to do the best they can to keep their walkway passable. If needed, the DPW stocks a pile of sand in the Town Parking Lot for everyone's general use. And, if you are walking near one of these icy areas, please be extra careful.

Car on the tracks near the N. Main Street crossing on Dec. 29.

Location of Border Street sidewalk extension.

Border Street Sidewalk Extension – In reviewing the recently completed seawall project at Border Street and after listening to the input of nearby residents, the Town has started on a design for a short section of sidewalk that will connect the new harborside sidewalk to the sidewalk on the Mill River Bridge. The photo shows the path of the sidewalk. At the right edge of the area in the photo there will be a crosswalk to connect to the existing sidewalk. Once preliminary design and cost estimates are completed we will know if this can be built within our budget of available funds. If everything is favorable, we should be able to do the construction in the spring. So, stay tuned.

Sample Data

	# of Cars
Opening Day Oct. 31, 2007	75
Nov. 20, 2007	130
Dec. 4, 2007	152
Dec. 11, 2007	169
Jan 7, 2008	165

So, as you can see, it appears that the ridership has leveled off, at least based on our sample.

The hunt for Whitey

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

In King Arthur's time, knights errant sought the Holy Grail, whatever that was. Early African explorers searched for the mythical kingdom of Prester John. Coronado turned the Southwest upside down for El Dorado, the city of gold that existed over the next hill.

For the past 13 years, the FBI has been hunting for James "Whitey" Bulger with the same degree of success.

In case your interest in current events doesn't go much beyond Britney Spears, the Whiteman was indicted for racketeering and extortion in January, 1995, whereupon he picked up a new girl friend, hopped in his Mercury Grand Marquise and disappeared.

Since then, he has acquired new charges of 19 murders, an offer of $1 million for information leading to his capture, a spot (just below Osama bin Ladin) on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted List and a task force of seven members created to search for him and him alone.

To my knowledge, the last time such a task force was formed for just one fugitive, his name was Al Capone or John Dillinger or Prettyboy Floyd.

The Whiteman has been spotted in so many places around the globe that the motto of the group has been, "Join the Bulger Fugitive Task Force and see the world." Members don't pack heat. They need the room for Sunscreen No. 15.

The latest spotting of Whitey and his girlfriend, Catherine Greig, was last spring in the Sicilian resort town of Taormina by a vacationing Drug Enforcement Agency agent, who made a tape of the couple that was distributed on the FBI website.

For a while, no elderly American couple resembling in the slightest the 78-year-old Bulger and the 57-year-old Greig could visit the Louvre or sample the arroz con pollo without being scooped up and grilled by the polizei.

"The challenge for us is he can blend into any community," said Richard Teahan, coordinator of the Bulger task force. "He's an older gentleman and he's traveling with a woman. They look like a lot of people."

Whitey may yet escape punishment for his long list of crimes and he may die in exile a free man but his actions have brought down many of those that were closest to him.

John J. Connolly Jr., the FBI agent who had been credited with a lion's share of the glory in bringing down the New England Mafia, had grown so close to the Whiteman that it was he who warned him of the coming indictment, giving him time to escape. Connolly went to jail.

And there was Whitey's brother, Billy, the former president of the Massachusetts State Senate, who lost his job as president of the University of Massachusetts after an unsatisfactory appearance before a Congressional committee inquiring about Whitey's whereabouts. He came out of it with a hefty pension.

In his memoirs, published a year after his brother's disappearance, Billy Bulger wrote:

"It's left to me, as it has been to others, to speculate about what, if anything, is valid in the dark rumors published about him. I am confident much of it has been circulated as an oblique political attack on me.

"I know some of the allegations and much of the innuendo to be absolutely false. Other matters I cannot be sure about, one way or the other. I have no way of knowing and can only hope.

"But he is my brother and I love him, and pray that he will not damage himself again."

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

Surveys show that about 90 percent of New Year's resolutions are broken, half of which fail by the end of January. Armed with these statistics I felt safe in resolving to get fatter and become even less organized this year. I don't want to get ahead of myself, because the first few weeks are always the easiest, but judging from the fit of my corduroys and the little cloud of fruit flies flitting about the clutter on my desk, my new regimen is working fantastically well. The only disappointment has been the total lack of support from my family, which is sadly typical. But I'm pressing on, trying to make as much progress as I can in the early stages, knowing how hard it will be to remain gluttonous and disorganized in the long run.

My daughter Mary's 2008 resolution was to practice her clarinet more often, so I'm hoping she can learn a second or maybe even a third note. As I discovered years ago at an Osgood School Arbor Day celebration, it's possible for small children to play a vast array of songs on a recorder using just three notes over and over and over in subtly different sequences. Some indescribably long songs, in fact.

Nothing, however, can quite prepare you for your first fourth grade band concert. Just as everyone believes they have a good sense of humor, everyone thinks they're a music lover until they experience a group of 10-year-olds banging trumpets and wheezing into their snare drums. The worst part is when one of the students approaches the microphone and reads the title of the piece they're about to assault. "The William Tell Overture," he says confidently, then returns to his seat and shoulders his trombone like a bazooka. You think to yourself, "Okay, at least I know that one. This could actually be kind of—" And then noises come from the stage that sound so alien, it's like some kind of cruel hoax. You lean forward in your seat, mouth agape, waiting for the conductor to angrily wave off the whole thing and perhaps chuck his baton at the tuba player, but instead he plows on ahead determinedly as if a crime isn't being committed directly in front him.

I realize that every great musician has to start somewhere, but for every future professional oboist it seems there are whole school districts full of future plumbers and tone-deaf, arrhythmic dentists, and based on Mary's progress I think about eight years of lessons before the first public unveiling would be advisable. I know a lot of parents enjoy seeing their children on stage, so I'm not suggesting we cancel the concerts outright, just that we ensure the kids have no opportunity whatsoever to play. They could haul their instruments onto the stage, the band teacher could introduce each child, the child could hold up a few fingers to indicate how many notes he'd learned so far, he would bow, we would applaud — I swear this would kill a good 30 minutes. Then we could all suddenly glance at our watches and say, "My goodness, look at the time!" and flee the auditorium. The kids would probably be as relieved as we were.

My wife's New Year's resolution was to avoid the perennial stomach bug, yet here we are only a week into 2008 and she's down for the count. Teachers should really get hazard pay in the wintertime here, because practically every third student has some communicable disease. The reason is that as responsible parents we're always trying to toughen up our kids. When they fall off a horse we put them right back on. Those of us who can't afford horses use goats. If a child wakes up looking a bit spotty, we're usually willing to give school a shot, because the alternative is to spend all day at home coddling a cranky, walking virus factory, and frankly we need a break. As does the goat.

Nearly all New Year's resolutions are doomed to fail. The trick is to avoid making ones that are impossible to keep for 12 full months, such being nice to people who own Volvos or putting petty partisan bickering behind you. Start with some simple questions. What do you like to do with goats? Where do you want to be in a year? Who do you want to be? Is it you, in Massachusetts? Because if so I'd say you're done.

HEALTH NOTES

Volunteer for causes, run for office

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Recently, we at the Board of Health learned of the dismissal of a Health Agent in a neighboring town. We won't use names because of the nature of the discussions in this article. The Agent in this story is a member in good standing of the Mass Health Officers Association and was known by the community of health professionals as an honest, dedicated and respected associate. The reasons given for dismissal were failure to approve plans for treatment systems, which violated State septic system requirements. Selectmen in the Town in question appoint the members of its Board of Health. Rumors of conflict with the statutes have surfaced before in the town in question and evidently the problem came to a head with the resulting dismissal of an experienced and respected agent.

Of course, we in Cohasset elect our Board of Health and although our relationships with the Town's citizens are not perfect, we are seldom accused of bias and our hands are reasonably antiseptic. But when things go smoothly, we tend to get complacent. For the last two years, the board members up for election were unopposed. Other positions in Town have had a scarcity of candidates. And this year, we have two openings for selectmen. Things go best when we have a healthy supply of concerned citizens willing to run for office in the Town. What we don't need is individuals who take office to further their personal agendas. We all as voters should be vigilant regarding the slate of potential candidates. We have a small town and we get to know most of those who run for office. It's our duty to carefully consider the potential candidates in the upcoming elections in terms of capability and ethical character, not necessarily breadth of knowledge of the intricacies of the particular office for which they are running. And don't worry about lack of knowledge or experience. The paid staff and other elected members with staggered terms can provide an adequate supply of knowledge and corporate memory. Running a small town like Cohasset may require honesty and sensitivity but it's not rocket science.

We also don't need openings for unfilled elective positions with no one running. A situation, which leads to the unhappy plight of the town, referred to earlier. Unfilled positions tend to become appointed positions, a surplus of which in a town signal a general apathy and certainly introduce the opportunity for bias and favoritism or nepotism.

The Town, like the rest of the world, is facing a host of new challenges: rising temperatures are having an effect on both our fresh and salt-water resources. Contamination of our skies is changing the character of trace pollution in our environment; we need increasingly expensive energy to sustain our present lifestyle. Towns need new tools and methods to meet the demands of education, interactivity, commerce and communication.

Meanwhile we have to teach our kids, cook the meals, pick up the cleaning, bind wounds and carry out life's demands. All of which goes on while we're earning a living. And, oh yes, volunteer for causes and run for office. No wonder we have gaps in our election slate.

But, it needs to be done. In April, we'll have the general elections and most boards and committees in Town will be looking for new members. Generally, these jobs are different from those one habitually performs. For example, for the Board of Health a psychiatric nurse, a dental surgeon and an engineer with interesting backgrounds bring a diversity of ideas to the job from which the Town has benefited, and we work with dedicated talented professionals from whom we've enjoyed learning. So, consider, there's a place in Town government where you'll be needed and which you will enjoy.

Popular Route 3A bakery to close this month

organizational talents have taken the bakery business to another level.

From humble beginnings in tea breads to a full service bakery, complete with a long list of mouth-watering goodies, it has been a long journey to this point.

"The best part of the business is we know each other very well, not many mothers and daughters can say that," said Maggie.

The mother-daughter team will miss the daily customer interaction their retail store has provided. Customers have given them plenty of opportunities to laugh over the years, whether it was a slice of life story or hearing them gush on about just how much they love Maggie's signature coconut cake.

"Employees have become family, some customers have become family," says Jenn. A staff of 10 is employed at Maggie's Corner. Each day they gather the staff for breakfast and lunch together in order to keep in tune with each other and to keep on track with daily tasks.

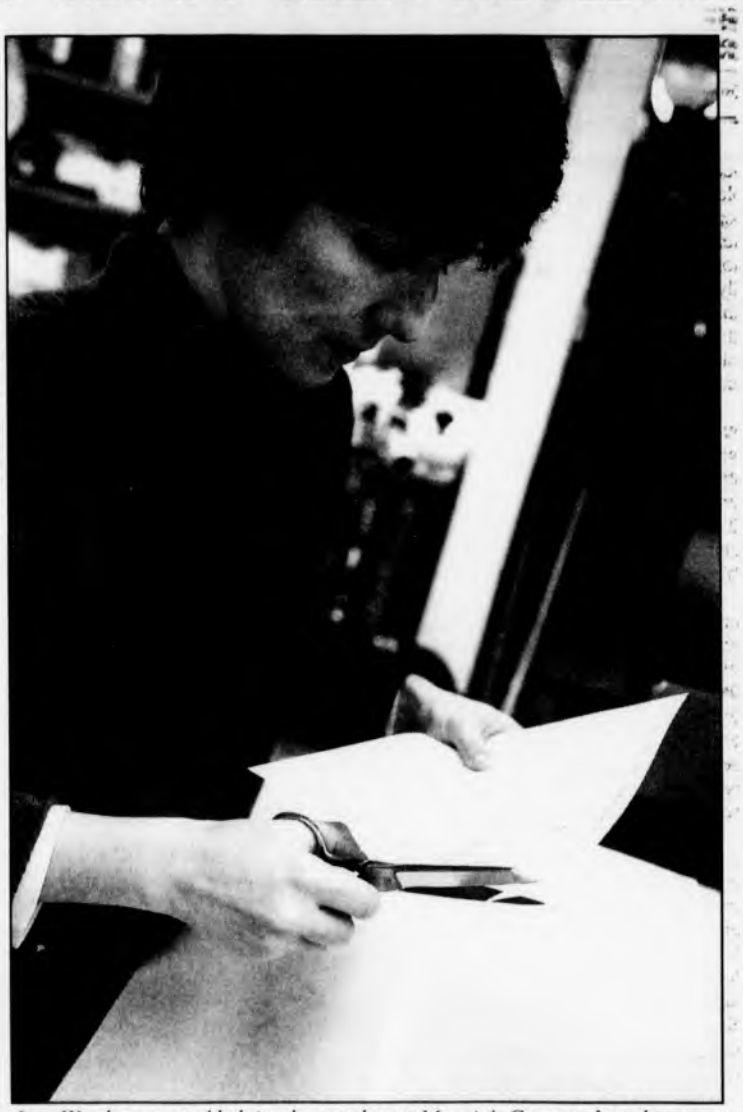
After closing out the business and selling the bakery equipment, the mother-daughter team plans to write a cookbook titled "The Cornbread Chronicles." The book will feature funny stories about their patrons alongside their favorite recipes.

"The hardest part is leaving the people. We've gotten to know kids and families, watched them grow up," says Maggie, "most people we've told are as emotional about it as we are."

But, both are convinced closing the bakery chapter of their lives is the right thing for them.

"There is no work balance, it's all work and no life," quips Jenn, but the statement rings true. The holiday season is especially tolling with 60 to 70 hour workweeks. In December, they filled orders for almost 1000 corporate gift baskets.

"Sometimes you have to close one door before another one opens," says Maggie. For them, the future is wide open, but retirement is definitely not in the cards.



"We're just going to see what plays out," says Maggie. After closing out the business and selling the bakery equipment, the mother-daughter team plans to write a cookbook titled "The Cornbread Chronicles." The book will feature funny stories about their patrons alongside their favorite recipes.

"It's all about the journey," says Maggie with a smile then looks at Jenn, "who are we going to be next?"

THE HOUSE AND SENATE: Beacon Hill Roll Call records local senators' votes on two roll calls from the week of December 31-January 4. There were no roll calls in the House last week.

The House and Senate officially convened the 2008 legislative session. Much of the activity was ceremonial but the Senate wasted no time in also getting down to some business.

Both Senate roll calls are on proposed amendments to a bill, approved by the Senate on a voice vote without a roll call, making Massachusetts the eleventh state to become a member of the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative. The pact is aimed at reducing carbon dioxide emissions from power plants. The Bay State joins Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maryland, Delaware, Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York and Vermont in capping the total carbon dioxide emissions from each state's electric power generators from 2009 through 2014 and then requiring a 2.5 percent reduction each year over the next four years.

The measure requires power plants to buy credits that would allow them to emit carbon dioxide. Participating states would hold a regional auction at which the plants could buy credits. Plants that emit carbon dioxide without the appropriate credits would be fined. Plants that produce less carbon dioxide than expected are allowed to sell their leftover credits to dirtier plants that exhaust their credits. Revenue generated from the sale of credits could be used for energy conservation and efficiency projects, mitigation of any resulting electricity rate hikes and to offset any property tax revenue losses suffered by cities and towns in which plants are located. Communities that host these plants could see property tax losses because property taxes are partially based on the profits of the plants. Governor Patrick's Executive Office of Energy and Environmental Affairs would ultimately determine how the funds are spent.

Patrick had already used his executive authority to sign onto the pact a year ago. The bill codifies the state's membership into state law and also establishes specific rules and regulations. Supporters said that making the membership a part of state law would prevent future governors from withdrawing from the pact. They noted that the pact would reduce emissions of greenhouse gases that contribute to global warming. Opponents said that the move would raise energy costs that would then be passed along to consumers and also put Massachusetts power plants at a competitive disadvantage. Former Gov. Romney considered joining the pact. He later expressed concern that the move would increase energy costs and opted not to join.

GIVE 25 PERCENT OF FUNDS TO CITIES AND TOWNS (S 2456)

Senate 7-25, rejected a Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative amendment mandating that 25 percent of the proceeds from the auction of the gas emissions credits be given as local aid to cities and towns. The bill, without the amendment, gives the authority solely to the Patrick administration to determine how the funds are distributed. Amendment supporters said that power companies would be passing their increased costs of purchasing the credits along to cities and towns that purchase electricity from them. They noted that the 25 percent guarantee would be a form of additional local aid that would reimburse struggling communities for these increased costs. Amendment opponents said that the amendment allows the Legislature to micromanage these funds and noted that it is best left up to the Patrick administration to decide where the funds would be best spent. They noted that the administration would still have the option to earmark some of these funds for cities and towns. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment requiring that 25 percent of the auction proceeds be given as local aid to cities and towns. A "No" vote is against the requirement).

$150 MILLION CAP (S 2456)

Senate 5-27, rejected an amendment temporarily suspending the state's participation in the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative if the power companies' cost of purchasing the emissions credits exceeds $150 million per year. The state would rejoin the pact when the costs are no longer projected to exceed the $150 million ceiling. Amendment supporters said that the cost of purchasing the emission credits is unknown and could be steep. They argued that the power companies would be passing along the increased costs to consumers and argued that the $150 million cap would protect consumers and ensure a balance between helping the environment and protecting consumers from excessive price hikes. Amendment opponents said that the proposed $150 million cap is premature. They argued that the Legislature should monitor the costs and only consider imposing a cap if the costs begin to spiral out of control. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment temporarily suspending the state's participation in the pact if the power companies' cost of purchasing the emissions credits exceeds $150 million per year. A "No" vote is against the cap).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL:

SENATE SESSIONS NOW ON THE INTERNET - The Senate last week joined the House and began broadcasting its formal sessions on the Legislature's website. The broadcasts include closed captioning for the hearing impaired. The House has already been broadcasting its sessions since January 2007. Both branches' sessions can be accessed at www.masslegislature.tv

REDUCE CIGARETTE FIRES - A new law requiring that cigarettes sold in Massachusetts be designed to self-extinguish if left unattended took effect at the beginning of the year. Supporters say that smoking materials are the leading cause of fatal fires in the nation. They noted that each year across the nation 1,000 people are killed and 300 critically injured as a result of cigarette-induced fires. The measure was approved in July 2006 by the Legislature and signed by former Gov. Romney. It gave tobacco companies 17 months to comply with the new law.

Spending games harm towns

HEDLUND REPORT

ROBERT HEDLUND

Two years ago, many of my colleagues appeared before their local municipal boards and spoke grimly of the state's financial state. They urged their local officials to budget conservatively, to not expect the types of local aid increases they had seen prior to the most recent economic downturn. We just don't have the money, they said.

And then these same legislators went back to Beacon Hill and voted for every spending bill they could. The highlight came in June 2006, when the Legislature passed a pair of bills contained a combined total of $742 million in new spending.

One of these bills was the so-called economic stimulus bill that featured money for projects like the infamous $100,000 Braintree gazebo and $200,000 for Victorian lighting in downtown Melrose. I was the only senator to vote against this bill, which even the Boston Globe referred to as "pork-laden."

Unfortunately, this is all part of a cynical and unfair fair game many of my colleagues play at the expense of our local cities and towns. They go before their local boards promising to deliver local aid, and then spend like drunken sailors when back in the State House. And what's the first thing they cut when times get tough? Local aid.

I feel that one of my Republican colleagues in the Senate, Richard Tisei of Wakefield, best summed up this often twisted relationship when he said, "When times are bad, the state always goes to the cities and towns and says we're in a partnership and we need to cut local aid. When times are good, when new revenue is coming in, we conveniently forget we're in a partnership. We haven't been a very good partner with cities and towns."

Tisei, who serves as the Senate's minority leader and has been in the Legislature since 1985, made that statement on the floor of the Senate during a recent discussion on a bill that would put into law the Commonwealth's participation with the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative. For the record, I support this pact among the Northeast states, as I am extremely concerned about the impact we are having on the environment.

One of the primary features of this piece of legislation is a cap on the amount of carbon dioxide — a leading type of greenhouse gas — that power-generating stations can emit. Under this bill, power companies would have to bid on credits in order to emit carbon dioxide, with each credit equaling one ton of pollution. The amount of credits available would be capped at 26.7 million, or approximately the average amount of carbon dioxide emitted in recent years.

This auctioning of credits, which is believed to be the first of its kind in the nation, is expected to raise more than $120 million, which would then be placed into a trust fund and used to pay for energy conservation and efficiency measures, as well as help support the emerging green power market.

As I said earlier, I support this initiative not just for the positive impacts it would have on the environment, but also that it creates a new stream of revenue — revenue that could be partially returned to our cities and towns. I, as well as my four Senate Republican colleagues, offered an amendment during the debate that would have required that 25 percent of the newly created trust fund's annual expenditures — or about $30 million — be returned to our communities to help pay for such things as installing new energy-efficient lighting fixtures or replacing old boilers and drafty windows.

Naturally, it was defeated by a largely partisan vote, as my colleagues once again showed they are all talk and little action when it comes to returning money to their districts.

I don't expect a much different outcome for a bill House Minority Leader Bradley Jones has filed. His legislation would return the $450 million that our municipalities were robbed of by the state earlier this decade. I consider it robbery because when the state Lottery was created in 1971, 100 percent of the profit was supposed to be returned to cities and towns as an additional form of local aid. Well, in 2003, rather than cut spending, the vast majority of the Legislature opted to "cap" Lottery aid payments, diverting hundreds of millions of dollars of local aid into state coffers and away from the communities. The result was layoffs for teachers, firefighters and police officers.

I provide all this background as we head into budget season here on Beacon Hill. Once again my colleagues are advising their town officials of the $1 billion-plus deficit being projected for the fiscal year starting in July, and urging them to budget conservatively. Except this time there is an additional level of truth behind it.

Another issue debated on the floor during our Senate session was the deficit in the Lottery aid account. As it turns out, state budget writers have been promising way more money in Lottery aid for cities and towns than the Lottery could produce. As a result, the Lottery aid account now stands about $250 million in the red, a figure that will likely be made up using the state's $400 million surplus from the most recent fiscal year. But in order just to level-fund Lottery aid accounts in fiscal 2009, the state will likely have to kick in $100 million of its own money, making a significant increase highly unlikely.

I will continue to be honest when I speak to my constituents and local boards and vote against wasteful spending here on Beacon Hill so that I will remain true to my promise: that local aid is a top budgetary priority of mine.

Republican State Sen. Robert Hedlund represents the eight-town Plymouth-Norfolk District that includes Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Weymouth, Norwell, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury.

Tap water should make a comeback

TOWARD A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

support this $16 billion industry.

Like most, I started hearing rumblings that our bottled water was not what it was cracked up to be. A lot of it is actually tap water despite the images of mountains and springs on the label. Claims of superior purity are often dubious. And more studies have been indicated to determine whether harmful chemicals from the plastic are leaching into the water.

There is also the environmental impact of bottled water. It takes 47 million gallons of oil to supply Americans with plastic water bottles for one year. In California alone, 1 billion(!) plastic water bottles end up in the trash (only 10 percent are recycled). And the toxins from the bottles are leaking back into the groundwater, threatening our future water supply. Multiply these statistics by the increasing availability of bottled water around the world.

I knew all of these facts. Yet (and this is where the embarrassing part comes in) until recently, I still received my monthly bottled water delivery. This, even as I sat at my desk writing about the plight of our environment.

Clean water should be available to everyone. This is one reason we pay taxes. And this is why standing together as a community to protect this right is of vital importance. Every dollar we turn over to a corporation for bottled water feeds a system fundamentally interested in profit over human interest. This may be fine when it comes to salad spinners and flat screen TVs, but it is unacceptable when applied to a most basic and necessary resource for survival.

Today it's water, tomorrow it could be air. Perhaps those trendy oxygen bars that popped up a few years ago where you paid a buck a minute for a deep breath are a precursor to a bottled air industry. As our carbon outputs soar, dirty, unbreathable air will follow and you bet there will be some corporation trying to capitalize by selling "cleaner" air. Does this sound absurd? Twenty years ago it probably sounded absurd to sell "cleaner" water in a bottle at a 1000 percent mark-up, yet here we are.

What can we do? First, we can make the commitment to stop buying bottled water for ourselves and our family. Just stop. Annoyingly obvious, I know, but a powerful solution. In our house, we now use a filter, mostly for taste. We carry reusable bottles when we are outside the home.

The edict to stop buying bottled water should also be adopted by our town governments. What message is our leadership sending to townspeople about our water supply when they themselves have bottled water delivered to town offices and sip bottled water at public meetings? San Francisco government struck bottled water from their budget, saving $500,000 a year. This should be the norm in all cities and towns.

Also, we can work with our water department to keep improving our public water supply. Could our involvement and the money saved from bottled water be used to support programs to continue the water quality that we deserve, and the taste we enjoy?

And finally there are scores of other little things that add up to big change. My heart was warmed when I saw a soccer coach on the field handing out glasses of water from a pitcher. Every public and private venue is ripe for a water overhaul.

Perhaps next New Year's, when we are reading the articles remembering the year past, we will be met with the big, bold declaration that 2008 was the year that tap made it's comeback!

Positive gains for Skippers

Boys basketball team wins holiday tourney; Hull gets revenge Tuesday

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

"It was nice for our psyche to get a win, to know we can beat one of the better teams in our league."
Dorian Bryant

The Cohasset Holiday Basketball Classic is always regarded as one of the best tournaments of its kind on the South Shore. Consistently providing good competition and a fun basketball environment, athletic director Ron Ford has put together a tournament with staying power and that means something (just ask Scituate, Duxbury or Rockland, all three missed a chance at a holiday tourney this year and all three felt the ill-effects once they resumed playing).

What's also nice is the slate is never filled with cupcakes – hence the fact the Skippers had never won the darn thing through the first 11 years. All that changed this year when Cohasset pulled out a slightly stunning (considering the final score) 69-35 win over Hull in the tournament championship.

"It's very important for our program," Cohasset boys basketball coach Dorian Bryant said. "It was a nice moment for us."

Senior captain Patrick McCarthy was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player, scoring 16 points against Sacred Heart and 21 in the win over rival Hull.

The fourth-year varsity guard is putting together a nice season for Cohasset and is a big reason the boys are 4-3 overall through the first seven games.

"He is one of our leaders and our go to guy in the clutch," Bryant said. "He is a guy that can change a game and he knocks down big shots that have led to some wins this year."

Marcus Charles, a junior guard, was also named to the all-tournament team.

"He is one of our best shooters on the wings," Bryant said. "He can set people up with his passing skills and he is good defensively – he brings a lot to the table."

Defeating Hull is always a big deal for Cohasset (the Pirates returned the favor Tuesday night beating the Skippers, 57-46).

"They have a really strong program and they have a big rivalry with our kids," Bryant said. "It was nice for our psyche to get a win, to know we can beat one of the better teams in our league."

More recently Cohasset defeated Harwich, 67-57, Friday night behind senior David Snowdale and junior Danny Martin. Snowdale scored 18 points, while Martin added 17 points, 13 rebounds and five blocked shots.

"David is an intense kid and a leader on the floor," Bryant said about the forward's career night

Smashing success

Lyster's big hit propels Skippers to win Friday; Clippers best boys Saturday

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Ian Lyster meet Rick Dares, Rick Dares, Ian Lyster.

Maybe it wasn't so cordial, but hockey is hockey and a hit is a hit and that is what the Cohasset junior defenseman did to the South Shore Vocational captain, he put on a big hit and changed the momentum of a hockey game, Friday night.

Trailing 2-0 after one period, a first period in which Mr. Dares scored once and assisted on another, Cohasset came out in the second half determined not to let the game slip away. That's when Lyster practically put Dares into the stands on a check that broke the glass and paused the game

The Skippers go wild after tying the game against Rockland recently. Cohasset has skated out to a 3-3-1 record to start the season and will get ready to face Old Rochester at home Friday.

Flibotte leads Groton's win streak

Junior Captain Gabriella Flibotte of Cohasset led the Groton School Lady Zebra basketball team to its fifth straight victory with a 51-17 win over St. George's School of Newport, RI.

Scoring was slow over the first 12 minutes of play as both teams had just returned from a two-week break. With 6:09 to play in the first half and the score locked at 10-5, Groton called a timeout hoping to jump-start its offense. Some sharp shooting by the Zebras enabled them to take a 24-11, halftime lead.

Flibotte came out of the locker room on fire – offensively and defensively. In addition to five steals, the junior had 12 points in the half, including going 2-for-3 from three-point range. Flibotte's on-the-ball defensive pressure inspired the entire team, as the Zebras would only allow the visiting Dragons six points in the entire half.

"Gabby is a tremendous defensive player with quick feet and great instincts," said Groton head coach Susan Wynn. "Her intensity brings the entire team to a higher level."

Flibotte finished the night with 14 points and 8 rebounds. The Zebras end the week with a record of 5-2.

Squad defeats Rockland, falls to Halifax by one point

The eighth grade girls travel team played two out of three scheduled games prior to holiday break with a third being cancelled due to a snow. On a cold Saturday night in December the girls traveled to Rockland and came out victorious, 37-19. The team came ready to play, setting the tone early with Cohasset playing solid defense. Anna Seraikas and Christie Fitzgerald shared the responsibilities at point guard, running a motion offense to give Cohasset the lead at the half, 17-7.

In the second half, the defense continued to deny Rockland and the offense continued to shine. Contributions came from everyone as the team recorded 28 rebounds, 22 steals, eight blocked shots and shot over 40% from the floor. Isabel Robinson led the way on offense with 10 points, followed by Allie Farren, Anna Seraikas and Sage Stebbins (each with six), Christie Fitzgerald (four), Watson Leffel (three) and Ruthann Barry (two). The team dominated the boards lead by Allie Farren with 10, Watson Leffel and Isabel Robinson (each with five), Jen Mullin, Olivia Franklin and Sage Stebbins (each with two) and Christie Fitzgerald and Ruthann Barry with one a piece.

Cohasset took care of things on defense too. In addition to second shots, steals were a real driver for scoring. The team snatched 22 steals in the contest, with Allie Farren leading the way with eight, followed by Anna Seraikas (five), Christie Fitzgerald and Isabel Robinson (each with three), Sage Stebbins (two) and Olivia Franklin (one). Blocked shots came from Allie Farren (four), Anna Seraikas (two) and Olivia Franklin and Watson Leffel (each with one). Special recognition goes to Allie Farren whose tenacious play and leadership earned her the coveted Hustle Award, tallying six points, 10 rebounds, eight steals and four blocked shots.

Martin, a 6-foot, 5-inch big man is one of the most vital parts of the Skippers attack. Martin played stellar in the holiday tournament and continued his very good start to the season against Harwich.

"He is extremely important for us," Bryant said about Martin. "We try and get the ball inside to him first on offense to open things up for our guards. He really is our presence down low, he can block shots, dunk the ball and score some points."

Cohasset is also getting quality minutes from starting varsity point guard Robert Jones.

"He is phenomenal," Bryant said about the freshman. "He is a natural point guard, and for a freshman I am amazed at his court sense and vision...he also works really hard."

Hull came out strong at home, Tuesday night, ready to avenge the loss in the holiday tourney. The Pirates led by as many as 23 points in the third quarter before a comeback by the Skippers cut the lead to six with 2:30 left to play in the ball game. It would be as close as they would get (the loss dropped the Skippers to 1-3 in the South Shore League).

Robert Jones makes a move against Abington. Jones is starting for the Skippers at point guard.

"I don't think we matched their intensity in the first half," Bryant said. "Once we settled down it was a little too late, I wish we could have put some more time on the clock. The kids never gave up and they worked hard."

McCarthy finished with 17 points in the game.

Cohasset plays league opponent Norwell, a team that had not lost a game yet this year, tonight (Friday, Jan. 11) on the road. Tip-off is at 6:30 p.m.

The snowstorm kept the team off the court for over a week, and the holidays had the team traveling down to face Halifax with just six players. Halifax has a solid team and a very tall center who possesses good skills all over the court. But that did not stop Cohasset's six player squad from tallying a season high 40 points, grabbing 28 rebounds, coming up with 20 steals and blocking six shots.

With only six players and no one to substitute for the center position, it was imperative that Cohasset avoid foul trouble early in the contest. Cohasset held back its full court press, but handed Halifax a very alert and active 2-3 defense. Exceptional anticipation at the top of the key by Christie Fitzgerald and Isabel Robinson generated a number of steals that lead to fast break baskets. Allie Farren, Jen Mullin and Olivia Franklin kept the post area locked down, and worked well as a group to shut down baseline drives.

On offense, outside shooting by Christie Fitzgerald opened up the middle, allowing Olivia Franklin and Isabel Robinson to work the ball inside to Allie Farren and Jen Mullin. Working in the paint, Allie Farren drew a number of fouls including a pair against Halifax's center. The team was relentless on defense and smart play on offensive generated points and fouls. Cohasset left the court at halftime clear of foul trouble and holding a 15-12 lead.

The second half was nonstop action. Halifax's center returned to the game. No trip down the floor by Cohasset was wasted with the team putting up good shots, and getting great position to ensure second and third chances at the basket. Continued tough defense including nine blocked shots, coupled with aggressive defensive rebounding by Allie Farren and Jen Mullin kept Halifax away.

Putting on a full court press, Cohasset maintained its ground; however, two quick whistles left Isabel Robinson with five fouls and she had to sit down. Then the Halifax center got hot, pulling them into striking distance. With less than one minute on the clock, she threw up an unlikely three point shot and it went in. Cohasset fought back but a couple successful trips to the foul line by Halifax left a tired and disappointed Cohasset squad on the short end of a 41-40 score.

The group should be commended for its performance. These six players faced a bigger squad but not once did they let up. Every player rose to the occasion, the team shot a season high 49% from the floor and racked up 24 rebounds, 13 steals and 11 blocks. Isabel Robinson led they way on offense with 13 points, followed by Allie Farren and Christie Fitzgerald (each with eight), Olivia Franklin (six) and Jen Mullin (five). Allie Farren and Isabel Robinson each grabbed seven rebounds, joined by Jen Mullin (four), Olivia Franklin and Christie Fitzgerald (three).

Isabel Robinson led the way in the steals department with six. Christie Fitzgerald (three), Allie Farren (two) and Jen Mullin and Ruthann Barry (each with one) also recorded steals. Bringing the season total to 69 blocked shots, Allie Farren tallied six blocks, Olivia Franklin and Christie Fitzgerald each recorded two and Jen Mullin added one block. Special recognition goes to Isabel Robinson who sparked her team with her unyielding focus and persistent play, earning her the coveted Hustle Award, with season highs of 13 points and six steals and a notable seven rebounds.

Lyster's big hit propels Skippers to win Friday

for forty-odd minutes.

"It was a good clean hit by Ian," Cohasset boys hockey coach Bob Walsh said. "I coached Ricky Dares when he was younger and he's a good tough kid. Ian played his position well and simply made the hit necessary to gain position."

Both teams were sent to their locker rooms while the glass was replaced and the ice cleaned.

"Once you know everyone is OK, then you start to worry about a 40 minute delay in the game and what positive or negative affect this will have on your team," Walsh said. "It was only a 1:10 into the period so I was pretty confident that my guys would stay fired up and not lose momentum but you never really know until it's too late."

Cohasset didn't lose momentum and in fact built a head of steam and stormed out to a 7-4 victory.

At 5:47 of the second period, Cohasset captain Alex Goetz scored from his younger brother, Anders Goetz, in a scrum in front of the Vikings net making the score 2-1.

The Skippers knotted the game with less than a minute and a half left in the second when sophomore Brendan Doonan scored assisted by senior captain Chaz Czerkawski.

The third period was almost all Cohasset as they out-scored the Vikings 5-2. Big goals were scored by all four Cohasset captains, Czerkawski, Goetz, senior defenseman Frank Wheelwright and two goals by senior Pat Doonan. Cohasset out-shot South Shore 47-22 in the win.

"We came out slow, that is one of those things that always worries me," Walsh said. "A few games it has taken a while to get the train going."

Cohasset followed the South Shore Vocational game with a match against perennial league powerhouse Norwell. The Clippers won the game, 4-0, but Cohasset kept it competitive throughout. The loss dropped the Skippers to 3-3-1 overall, 2-1 in the South Shore League.

The score through one period Saturday had both teams knotted 0-0.

"We came out and played really tight, they out-shot us big in the first and played a lot in our end but we were set up to do that," Walsh said. "The hard part is keeping the guys calm and focused on the game plan."

Norwell added two in the second and two in the third to get the win. Cohasset received another strong performance in net from Jonny Wade.

"He played great and had some huge saves during the game," Walsh said. "In a couple of cases Norwell had sure goals and Jonny came through diving across the crease."

Cohasset is getting strong play from the usual suspects, including all four captains, but the performances of freshman Anders Goetz has opened some eyes.

"He has been unbelievable," Walsh said about Anders. "The assistant coaches are always looking over at me and saying, 'I love that kid.'"

He may be the smallest kid on the ice, but Walsh insists the youngest Goetz plays "six feet tall."

The top five points leaders for Cohasset through seven games are, Czerkawski (6), Pat Doonan (6), Frank Wheelwright (6), Anders Goetz (6) and Alex Goetz (5).

Cohasset plays tonight (Friday, Jan. 11) at Pilgrim Arena against a scrappy Old Rochester team. The puck drops at 6:50 p.m.

The Cohasset Youth Baseball & Softball Association (CYBSA) will hold its annual registration for the upcoming baseball and softball spring season ONLINE beginning December 21, 2007 through February 1, 2008. Parents/Guardians can complete the registration process by visiting our website: CYBSA.net.

The registration process will be closed on February 1, 2008. Registrations that are completed after February 1, 2008 will be charged a $50 per player late fee and late registrants will only be placed on a team if space permits, on a first come first serve basis. The late fee will be strictly enforced, and there is no guarantee that late registered players will be accommodated, as uniform orders and other season plans will be made on February 1st. Your cooperation in registering players in a timely manner is greatly appreciated as it allows the CYBSA to establish rosters and order equipment and uniforms so that we are ready for opening day.

Please be advised that returning players already assigned to a Major League team are still required to register.

The CYBSA will also provide a one day walk- in registration on Saturday, January 26, 2008. Please visit our website for details.

SIGNS OF SPRING

With the warm weather this past week, some Cohasseters are already thinking spring! And what means spring more in town than the Rotary Club's Cohasset Road Race by the Sea, an annual tradition. Here runners make their way along Atlantic Avenue before turning onto the street of seven hills, Forest Avenue. Stay tuned to the Mariner all winter for your sports news, including updates on this year's road race, which will be the 32nd annual!

Spinnaker issue is in the works

LIFE AT CHS

CHRISTINE KENT

Hello everyone! It's good to be writing again after having taken a short two-week hiatus. Possibly old news now, but hopefully everyone had a great holiday. Is anyone else suffering from twinkle light and decoration withdrawal? Who says you can't keep Christmas lights on your front porch all year round! Oh well, holiday season '07 has officially ended, meaning it's time to think of new '08 resolutions. Most of us will only keep these resolutions for a few months, not to be a Debbie Downer but let's be honest with ourselves here! My New Year's resolution of not making any more resolutions should be easy enough. The first few weeks back from any long break from school are always difficult and sometimes tiring as we all try to get back into the swing of things. Time to switch the channel changing muscles for the essay writing, quiz taking, and homework muscles (sigh). Someday teachers and science will prove that homework is, in fact, detrimental to our development!

On the bright side, it seems as though CHS athletics has proven to be quite the source of entertainment. Last week, the varsity hockey team came back to tie 5-5 in the last ten minutes of their game versus Rockland, an awesome feat for the boys in blue, who almost faced a 5-1 loss. Talk about comeback kids; the tying goal was scored with a mere four seconds left in the game. If the enticing game of hockey doesn't float your boat then maybe the boy's varsity basketball team will, topping up their 4-2 season with yet another win against Harwich last week, winning 67-57.

Stepping away from the sports, as that is Hazel Mae's job, it's time to announce that the Valentine's Day issue of the Spinnaker is already in the works. So don't be afraid to open the door to any of the smiling seniors; journalism students looking for business or individuals interested in buying ads for the newspaper.

Also, future National Honor Society hopefuls are only steps away from a possible induction into the scholarly organization. For those unsure of what NHS is, it is a collection of students invited from grades 11 and 12 who have a GPA of at least 3.4, though that just gets a foot in the door as other important attributes are required to be selected.

Well, that's it for exciting school news! Time for the weekly run down: Monday, Jan. 7, driver's education met in room 166 for one of their final sessions; Tuesday, Jan. 8, the boy's basketball team played close rivals, the Hull Pirates. Sadly, they were unable to continue their winning streak against the neighboring team. Also, the swim team dove into action, swimming against Middleboro; Wednesday, Jan. 9, senior peer leaders met with their young protégés. Also, a meeting for Relay for Life was held in the library; Thursday, Jan. 10, health nuts met in the library after school for a health, fitness, and nutrition workshop. Junk foods beware! Could this mean more fruits and veggies in the lunchroom? And lastly, Friday, Jan. 11, senior songbirds shared their musical talents at the District Music Festival in Barnstable. Sports captains met in the library for a workshop that will fine-tune their leadership abilities.

That's a wrap for this week's article. Have an awesome weekend!

Scientist succeeds with online degree program

ROMIYA GLOVER

By Christopher Hartley
MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL HOSPITAL

Romiya Glover is a woman on a mission: to further her education in clinical investigation so she can help develop new laboratory instruments. The one she is working on currently can provide the results of a basic blood count plus CD4 lymphocyte count in just 14 minutes; both key tests when managing patients with HIV/AIDS.

Her interest in science began when she was a student at Worcester Polytechnic Institute, where Glover received her bachelor's degree.

"My focus was on biology and biotechnology, and then I began an internship at PointCare Technologies in Marlborough, where I worked in manufacturing medical devices and I was also learning about quality assurance and regulatory issues," she says. As an intern, Glover was responsible for ensuring that new devices passed quality control.

"Our team was strong on core science background, but no one had strong knowledge of how to carry out the trials ... how to design protocols, monitor sites, and collect and analyze data," Glover says. "I became very interested in understanding regulations and how to bring a product to market."

Glover says she saw a need to connect scientists to the regulations in the industry in order to ensure successful launches of new devices. She saw a place for herself at the company, which inspired her decision to apply to a graduate program in clinical investigation.

"First I visited Monster.com, Careers.com and Petersons.com to explore clinical investigation and see what kind of background was necessary," says Glover. "I looked for programs that offered lots of flexibility. Since my employer has a tuition reimbursement program, I wanted to work and study."

One of the schools Glover considered was the MGH Institute of Health Professions. "I placed information on a few of my top choices in front of my boss and she helped me choose the most reputable one, which was the MGH Institute," she says. Glover enrolled in the online master's program in clinical investigation, graduating in May 2007.

"Last summer I became a manager of assay and reagent development where I develop the chemistries for the next new devices," Glover says. "I believe in PointCare's mission, which is to take current technology and make it affordable for poor communities and developing countries such as Haiti and Nigeria."

Glover says that before she became a manager she traveled to Trinidad and Barbados to install new blood analyzers in clinics and to train local clinicians.

Glover's team is working on the next generation of devices.

"I am in charge of designing trials and managing data, but the biggest reward is seeing our chemistry work in a device, and seeing it make a difference in a patient's life," she says.

There are many ways to earn a degree at Middlesex

ADVERTORIAL

MIDDLESEX COMMUNITY COLLEGE

As the largest community college in Massachusetts, with campuses in Bedford and Lowell, Middlesex Community College offers 76 degree and certificate programs, as well as hundreds of community education and career training courses available during the day, evening, weekend and online.

MCC's spring semester begins Jan. 22 and registration is now open.

"At Middlesex, more than half of our students are enrolled part time," said Marilynn Gallagan, Dean of Admissions. "MCC students are very busy, so we work really hard to offer flexible course schedules."

There are many ways to earn a degree on a part-time basis at Middlesex, Gallagan explained. "You can take classes in the evening, on the weekend and online. You can attend part-time during the day and supplement day classes with online courses or hybrid courses, which combine Web-based and face-to-face instruction," she said.

And, Gallagan stressed, part-time and online students have access to the same services as full-time MCC students, including academic counseling, tutoring, career counseling and disability support.

Online learning, or distance education, at Middlesex allows students greater flexibility in choosing when and where they take courses, and makes it possible to study in new ways, said Matthew Olson, director of Middlesex Interactive, MCC's online learning network.

"For those who want to finish their degree quickly, adding an additional online course to their regular course load can really speed things up. For students who have busy work schedules and family obligations, online courses can add a lot of flexibility to their schedule," he said.

Online learning, or distance education, at Middlesex allows students greater flexibility in choosing when and where they take courses.

With approximately 10 percent of MCC's 11,000 credit students taking online courses, distance education has become an important part of the culture at Middlesex, Olson explained. "Our online program is now 11 years old," he said. "We have a lot of experience in distance education and have a mature instructional model. Our faculty are very comfortable teaching online, and we offer 24-hour, seven-day-a-week technical support."

Middlesex offers approximately 120 online credit courses. Five degree programs can be completed entirely online, including business administration, liberal arts and sciences, criminal justice and fire science. Nine other programs of study - such as psychology, accounting, fashion and retail merchandising, global studies and life sciences - offer 80 percent or more of course requirements online.

MCC's online courses offer exactly the same credit as traditional courses, cover exactly the same topics, and are taught by the same faculty, Olson explained. "Online students need to have basic computer skills and should be pretty good independent learners," he said. "You have to be more active in an online course and apply the knowledge you learn."

Online courses often work out especially well for adult students, Olson said. "People who are used to being out in the workplace and working independently tend to respond well to distance-education courses," he said.

Students considering enrolling in online or hybrid courses at Middlesex can take a survey to help determine if their learning style is well suited to online learning. The online learning survey and a listing of each semester's online course offerings are posted on the Middlesex Interactive Web site at http://www.middlesex.mass.edu/online.

For further information about online courses at Middlesex, call 781-270-3716. MCC's complete Spring Semester Schedule is now available at www.middlesex.mass.edu. Call 1-800-818-3434 for more information.

Law school may help boost or change existing career

By Andrew J. Manuse
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Peter Sanborn was an English and history major as an undergraduate and used an internship in Tufts University's public relations office to propel him into his career.

Now, married 5½ years and expecting his first child, the Arlington resident and director of Web communications at Tufts University is also in his fourth year at Suffolk University Law School in Boston.

"Paralegals come here and want to become lawyers, or (students) have worked in research and want to turn that into a patent law career."

Laura Ferrari
Dean of students at Suffolk University

"My ultimate goal is to be university president, so I started thinking of ways to do that," Sanborn said. "I thought, if I become an attorney - looking at places where law intersects with university needs - then create a career in that direction and combine it with my communications background, that could form my career."

To make room for his career and family, Sanborn is taking advantage of Suffolk's evening program, a four-year degree program costs $26,960 annually. Suffolk's three-year day program costs $35,948. He is taking out loans to cover what an academic scholarship doesn't.

"The balance is challenging because of the sheer volume of the work," he said.

He works a normal day job and goes to school at night. He said he spends time with his wife on the weekends and during the summer.

"She is a very patient person," Sanborn said.

According to Laura Ferrari, dean of students at Suffolk, 98 percent of evening students at the law school have day jobs. Their average age is 27.

"Many are here to enhance their career or switch their career," Ferrari said. "Paralegals come here and want to become lawyers, or (students) have worked in research and want to turn that into a patent law career."

It's a lot of work, though, she said. The typical law student takes required courses in their first year, such as criminal law, tort law, constitutional law, property law, contracts, civil procedure and how to write and research legal cases. Evening students spread out the first year into two. Later on, students take electives that follows their particular interest and courses that will prepare them for the Bar Exam, she said.

To deal with the stress that may come with the workload, the cost of tuition or balancing life, work and family, students may be interested in the nonprofit Lawyers Concerned for Lawyers Inc., which began as a group to help attorneys with drug or alcohol problems, according to its executive director, Gina Walcott-Torres. The group has expanded now to provide free assistance to any problem and students are welcome, Walcott-Torres said.

"There is a lot of time required in law school, and falling behind is not an option," Walcott-Torres said. "Your professor won't want to know why you didn't do your homework - whether it's you have kids, you're married, your baby kept you up all night - they just want to know that you did it."

Walcott-Torres said professors will call on each student in class randomly to go over the past night's assignment. This could be difficult for someone who's been away from school for some time, she said.

Still, professionals returning to law school will be looked at favorably, she said, because they probably didn't make the decision to go into law school lightly.

Students form study groups at school, and usually choose to work with people in their similar situation, Walcott-Torres said.

"Until you find other people like you, there's a small sense of isolation," she said. "Once you set up alliances, you form support groups to deal with that."

GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE PHOTO BY LISA CASSIDY

Peter Sandborn attends Boston's Suffolk University Law School at night.

Picking the right law school should also be a consideration, according to Marilyn Wellington, executive director of the Massachusetts Bar Association.

"As you look at law schools, you have to look at what you're trying to accomplish," she said. "Clearly, a Harvard degree is an invaluable degree. ... But it depends on your goals."

A Harvard, Boston College or similar law school may propel students into one of Boston's larger law firms, Wellington said. But those schools don't have evening programs, so it might be more worthwhile to consider Suffolk or the New England School of Law, which make it easier for students to work while they're going to school.

Once graduated, the sky is the limit, Wellington said.

Law school graduates can become law librarians, teachers, open their own firm, join an existing firm, become a judge, or go into other public service, she said. Many corporations and nonprofit groups recruit attorneys into management and administrative positions. Their law degree gives them a basic knowledge of contracts and negotiations, she said.

Wellington herself started with a degree in music education, she said. She taught kindergarten through eighth grade music for a while then decided to go to law school.

"I enjoyed music and teaching, but it wasn't something I felt I wanted to do the rest of my life," she said. "As I thought about it, with a law degree you can do a variety of different things.

"People think of court and trial lawyers when they think of lawyers, but if you're someone who likes to learn and somewhat of an academic, it's an interesting thing to go through," she added.

Wellington practiced law for 10 years before she took her current job, she said.

Off-season Bermuda delights

David L. Harris

Hamilton, Bermuda -

A large, smiling pirate looked down at me as I lounged by the sun-splashed pool of The Fairmont Hamilton Princess hotel. The 20-foot lighted buccaneer, posted on the side of a nearby docked boat, was part of Bermuda's holiday boat parade, an annual display of highly decorated boats and fireworks around Hamilton's harbor.

Fortunately for me, the pirate was one of the only presences at the pool.

Winter is not high tourist season in Bermuda and that's just fine for those of us who enjoy peace and quiet. There are no tourist crowds; no cruise ship passengers walking through the streets or in the shops.

In Hamilton, the police officer who normally puts on a show for tourists by directing traffic in a little kiosk takes time off. And you don't need to maneuver yourself space on the beach.

Winter visitors don't quite have the small, sunny, wealthy island all to themselves. But it just might feel that way at times.

I'd come here for a relaxing four-day weekend. When I arrived at the airport, it was raining, but, as any Bermudian will tell you, all you have to do is wait a bit. A half-hour later the sun was shining.

Bermuda in winter isn't hot, but it is warm enough - often in the 60s - to sit in the sun. And if lounging is not your thing, there's plenty else to do.

You may have the pool practically to yourself.

There is plenty of room to spread out on Bermuda beaches in winter.

In Southampton, for $2.50, you can trek up all 185 steps to the top of the lighthouse at Gibb's Hill, home to one of the most magnificent views of Bermuda. Built in 1846, the lighthouse is noteworthy for the fact it's built of cast iron. Or you can take a leisurely walk on the nearly 22-mile scenic railway trail, carved out of Bermuda's old railroad - the tracks were torn up in 1948 after Bermuda officials decided passenger rail service was just too expensive to maintain.

Hamilton, Bermuda's capital, is also its center for shopping and the arts. Check out the City Hall Arts Centre on Church Street, which houses the Bermuda National Gallery of Art (www.bermudanationalgallery.com). The museum, smack dab in City Hall, is small but vibrant and features a large collection of Bermudian, African and African American art. Admission is free, and every Thursday at 10:30 a.m., you can get a free, guided tour.

Just around the corner are shops: from U.K. department store Marks and Spencer to Bermuda's well known A.S. Cooper and Son apparel store. There's no sales tax in this British territory, so whatever price you see is what you pay.

With the tourists sparse, Bermudans rule the streets. On my visit, parents and kids frolicked from shop to shop and teenage boys tried to impress the girls with their scooter skills.

About an hour's drive from Hamilton - at the other end of the island (closer to Southampton) - sits the Royal Naval Dockyard, which contrary to its name is not a functioning military base. A taxi will get you there efficiently, although the convenient public bus is a lot less expensive.

The Dockyard is a popular tourist spot, with attractions including the Bermuda Rum Cake Factory, where I bought a rum swizzle-flavored cake to take back home. There's also Dockyard Glassworks, which features a variety of beautiful handmade glass, and the Clayworks, where you can buy island-made pottery.

On the ride from Hamilton there are sights to see, including Fort Scaur, a 19th century fort that serves up a superb view of Hamilton and most of the island. On the way from the fort to the Dockyard, you can also stop at Haydn Trust, the smallest church on the island.

But all this touring will inevitably make you hungry. For an elegant Old World dinner, try the Waterlot Inn (101 South Shore Road), the oldest restaurant on the island - it dates back to 1670. The Waterlot is now part of the Fairmont Southampton resort, and features a menu of mostly steak, but you have to try the rich sherried onion soup, too - made with delicious locally grown onions.

And don't forget to indulge in the island's specialty drink, the ``dark and stormy," a sinful mix of dark rum and ginger beer.

For a more casual meal, try the nearby Henry VIII restaurant (52 South Shore Road), where you can order Bermuda specialties such as a savory codfish sandwich with mango chutney or pan-fried rockfish. The restaurant also has a great view of the ocean if you sit outside on the deck.

In Hamilton, Little Venice (32 Bermudiana Road) is a cozy Italian restaurant with good food including veal marsala, an extensive wine selection and impeccable service. Don't forget dessert, including a delectable bread and butter pudding.

A must-do is high tea, complete with little sandwiches, pastries and scones with clotted cream, all expertly served at The Fairmont Hamilton Princess, the elegant harbor-front hotel in Hamilton.

They say this British territory has more golf courses per square mile than any other country in the world. Whether the statistic is accurate or not, there are plenty of places on Bermuda to keep duffers entertained including the exclusive championship Mid Ocean Club (www.themidoceanclubbermuda.com), site last year of the PGA Grand Slam.

The boat parade isn't the only festivity on the island in the winter months. Other events, such as the Bermuda Festival of the Performing Arts (Jan. 15-Feb. 23; www.bermudafestival.org), with its dance, theater and music offerings; International Race Weekend (Jan. 18-20; www.bermudaraceweekend.com), featuring a half and full marathon; and the Bermuda Film Festival (March 28-April 5; www.biff.bm), attract a fair mix of tourists and locals.

But avoiding crowds altogether is also an enticing possibility.

Hamilton is Hip

The big news in Bermuda may be the attempt by locals and visitors alike to let down their hair.

Throw off that sporty suit jacket. Bermuda's still a conservative place in all respects, but it's become remarkably less formal. Remember those Bermuda shorts worn with long socks? You'll see a lot less of those.

``It used to be that most restaurants required a jacket and tie," said Lloyd Roberts, owner of a local cab company and a lifelong resident of Bermuda. ``Not so nowadays. Those old timers have passed on, and the new generation doesn't want to be as formal."

And the new generation also wants fun. Nightlife is Bermuda's latest phenomenon.

Hamilton, Bermuda's capital, suddenly has hip clubs and wine bars.

Lotus Lounge, housed in a Thai restaurant called Silk on Front Street in Hamilton, is another fun nighttime option, and has a DJ. But this is still Bermuda, so be aware the place closes at 2 a.m.

IF YOU go...

Getting there: Bermuda is a less-than-two-hour flight from Boston. Delta (www.delta.com) offers nonstop flights with winter fares from around $338.

Staying there: The Fairmont Hamilton Princess is where Mark Twain stayed when he was on-island. The 410-room hotel on Hamilton harbor is the Grand Dame of Bermuda properties. Rates start at $229 per night. 800-257-7544, www.fairmont.com

The Fairmont Southampton sits atop a hill, surrounded by the ocean on one side and the harbor on the other. The 593-room hotel features nine restaurants, a full-service spa, indoor and outdoor pools and a par-3 golf course. Rates are from $259 per night. 800-257-7544, www.fairmont.com

Walking through Portsmouth's black history

Barbara Radcliffe Rogers
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

IN NEW ENGLAND

Portsmouth, N.H. -

The restored homes of Strawbery Banke offer a far different view of Portsmouth, N.H., than that seen by those in chains aboard slave ships arriving in the Colonial port.

The first view for those arrivals would probably have been the slave block on Long Wharf, where they would have been auctioned to the highest bidder.

Long Wharf today is the starting point for the Portsmouth Black Heritage Trail, a route of 24 sign-posted sites around the historic seaport.

Those of us in the North tend to think of slavery as peculiar to Southern history, but slaveholding was not uncommon in colonial and Federal-era New England. After all, New England ports - including Portsmouth - were the northern point for the infamous ``Triangle Trade" of molasses, slaves and rum. A 1775 census records 656 enslaved Africans in New Hampshire, most in the seacoast area.

Reading the signs of the Black Heritage Trail you learn the owner of the William Pitt Tavern, now part of Strawbery Banke Museum, auctioned some of the slaves. A sign at his tavern illustrates how slaves were ``invisible" in the eyes of the law, protecting them from punishment for misdeeds ordered by their masters.

You learn not all slaves were farm and domestic workers. Primus Fowle was a skilled printer, whose master owned the ``New Hampshire Gazette," for instance.

Portsmouth also had a number of free blacks, including Cyrus Bruce, freed by Gov. John Langdon - as Langdon's butler, Bruce was a well-known figure in Portsmouth, and his story is told at the John Langdon House.

Other familiar landmarks figure into the city's black history. The Children's Museum on Marcy Street was the first black church in the state, growing out of a Bible study group in 1890. The story continues into the 20th century, with black social clubs and fraternal and with black residents in the military and in defense jobs at the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard.

St. John's Church is one of the sights on Portsmouth's Black History Trail. Once with segregated pews, the church later became a leader in the Civil Rights movement.

The trail ends chronologically in the 1960s with the work of the Seacoast Council of Race and Religion, a group of people of all races, formed to raise money for projects including voter registration in Mississippi and to provide a voice against local de facto segregation.

New Bible Study began on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Practical Christianity. Some Christians commonly view the Old Testament as a storybook-full of fascinating tales, yet ancient and irrelevant to modern reality. This exceptional 10-week study from Insight For Living with Chuck Swindoll will help you blow the dust off these timeworn chronicles and discover enduring truths that relate directly to you, while translating into reliable patterns for godly living. Experience familiar passages as never before, and find fresh inspiration in the memorable scenes revisited. Follow the examples of faithful Old Testament heroes such as Abraham, Joseph, David, and many others as you learn to apply timeless biblical principles to your everyday life. Please join us.

Best of a borderline bunch

Best Films of 2007

By Al Alexander

I think 2007 may go down as The Year of Lowered Expectations in film. Movies that would have only passed for mundane in previous years were somehow elevated to "exceptional" this year. I couldn't believe the praise that was heaped upon less-than-stellar works like "Michael Clayton," "Gone Baby Gone," "The Simpsons Movie" and the current flavor of the month, the gratingly dull "The Diving Bell and the Butterfly."

In fact, I had a hard time coming up with 10 films. And as much as I love my choices, I have to be honest in saying that only three or four of them would have cracked last year's list.

Still, these are some very original and highly entertaining pictures that were the best that 2007 had to offer. I begin with the best…

"No Country for Old Men": Joel and Ethan Coen's brilliant adaptation of Cormac McCarthy's prize-winning novel about the borders between nations, eras and men's souls offered everything from biblical themes of good vs. evil to ruminations on karma, fate and chance. But it was the way the brothers folded these esoteric musings into a standard chase film that reeked of genius. But the film will be most fondly remembered for Javier Bardem's creepy but indelible portrayal of Anton Chigurh, a ruthless killer so evil, he'd make Hannibal Lector shake in his body harness.

"Knocked Up": Writer-director Judd Apatow wed raunchiness and romance into an unholy union to love, honor and cherish with his story about a one-night stand between a rumpled stoner (Seth Rogen) and a gorgeous career woman (Katherine Heigl) that resulted in an unwanted pregnancy. It was conception that gave birth to one of the best — and funniest — romantic comedies since "When Harry Met Sally." But what made it an instant classic was the way Apatow shored it up by going just below the surface to subtly explore issues of responsibility and family.

"Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street": Amazing sets, a gorgeous Stephen Sondheim score and a killer cast featuring the sinfully talented Johnny Depp gave the film its cachet, but it was Tim Burton who infused it with soul. It was such a perfect match of director and material that you wonder why it took so long for it to come together. But, boy, did it. The master of heartfelt horror performed a stunning makeover by adapting Sondheim's somewhat dated tale of love, revenge and the dangers of a close shave into a very intimate and moving experience that was bloody good.

"Black Box": There's nothing like forbidden love, especially when it's between a lapsed Nazi and a Jewish aristocrat — come Mara Hari — who has lost everything at the hands of her lover's comrades. Dutch-born filmmaker Paul Verhoeven milked it for everything it was worth, providing thrills, titillation and unabridged violence — not to mention numerous excellently rendered plot twists — as he and his co-screenwriter Gerard Soeteman cleverly concocted a story equal parts James Bond, "Gone With the Wind" and "Debbie Does Dallas." Most prominently exposed was Carice van Houten, the most mesmerizing new actress I've seen in some time — even with her clothes on, which was only about half the time. Forget "Atonement," this is the wartime soap to see.

"Zodiac": I wasn't bowled over on first viewing of David Fincher's dark and stylish adaptation of Robert Graysmith's best-seller about the hunt for perhaps the most prolific serial killer of the past 40 years. But repeat viewings on DVD have revealed it to be an exceptional procedural about journalists and cops - played superbly by Jake Gyllenhaal, Robert Downey Jr. and Mark Ruffalo - futilely toiling to solve a series of crimes that shocked San Francisco Bay in the 1960s and '70s. Families and careers were destroyed simply because the men involved were so dedicated (or were they obsessed) with bringing Zodiac - whoever he was - to justice.

"I'm Not There": Todd Haynes went electric with his masterful and imaginative interpretation of the life and times of Bob Dylan. A glorious collision of style and substance, the film delivered a buzz like no biopic before it, simply because there was no other like it. Haynes' cleverest move was casting six different actors to play Dylan, each representing a piece of the enigmatic singer's multi-faceted career. The standout, though, was Cate Blanchett, so good as the "Blonde on Blonde"-era Dylan that you completely forgot that it was a woman behind those dark shades.

"The Hoax": Richard Gere delivered one of his finest performances as master charlatan Clifford Irving, the middling author who some say helped bring down the Nixon White House when he schemed to write a fake autobiography about Howard Hughes. Playing such a bigger-than-life character, Gere deftly went beyond mere impersonation and created a crook so smart, so charismatic you would never think of him as a crook. Kudos also go to director Lasse Hallstrom for presenting the material with such a giddy, almost absurdist, air.

"Hairspray": If ever there was a movie to get your beehive in a twirl, this was it. It's easily the most PG-rated fun I had at the movies all year. And one of the most inspiring, as a full-figured teen (Nikki Blonsky) found a way to chase her dream of becoming a dancer on "The Corny Collins Show," while simultaneously spearheading a campaign to win blacks equal rights. Director Adam Shankman, aided by an all-star cast featuring John Travolta in drag, kept it all moving at a rapid pace. But it was his exuberant choreography that gave "Hairspray" that little goose of mousse that sent it over the top.

"Juno": Fluently mixing old-fashion values with raunchy comedy, director Jason Reitman and first-time screenwriter Diablo Cody (a former stripper) created an experience that was as gut-wrenching as it was gut-busting in telling the quirky story of a precocious 16-year-old (not Jamie Lynn Spears) with a bun in the oven. Playing the mother-to-be was exciting newcomer Ellen Page, a diminutive actor with big enough talent to elevate heroine Juno MacGruff beyond just another glib, hip-talking stereotype into something quite affecting. Praise, too, to Jennifer Garner, delivering the best work of her career as the childless woman Juno has promised her baby.

"Lars and the Real Girl": Mixing dark humor and pathos with romance and camp, this Capra-esque comedy from writer Nancy Oliver was sweet and poignant like sweet and poignant ought to be: unadorned and sugar free. It also was one of the most original stories of the year, telling the tale of a town hermit (Ryan Gosling) who found a soul mate in a life-size rubber sex doll named Bianca. Like all the great films of its ilk ("Harvey," "Edward Scissorhands," "It's a Wonderful Life," "Big"), "Lars" mined its unending charm by keeping the fantasy rooted in reality, as it delivered a heartening treatise on love, community and the healing powers of silicone.

As a postscript, let me plug a dozen other favorites that didn't quite make the cut. They include in no particular order: "Waitress," "Charlie Wilson's War," "The Savages," "The Lookout," "Persepolis," "Control," "Talk to Me," "Ratatouille," "3:10 to Yuma," "Breach," "Once" and "In the Valley of Elah."

Big talent in big flops

Worst Films of 2007

By Bob Tremblay

Rasputia (Eddie Murphy) and Norbit (Eddie Murphy) celebrate their wedding in "Norbit."

Anyone can make a horrible movie. All you need is no talent. But what about a horrible movie with talented people in it? That takes some effort. So, this year, instead of focusing on the imbeciles who were given money by bigger imbeciles to make movies for imbeciles, we're concentrating on films where talented people end up looking like imbeciles.

Due to space limitations, we will provide only 10 examples — there are so many, many more. These films feature hack direction, pathetic writing and lame acting. Originality is also M.I.A. while integrity is D.O.A.

"Norbit": A surefire winner of multiple Razzie Awards. These are given to films that represent "the worst achievements of the movie year," and it doesn't get much worse than this. Eddie Murphy, who donned a fat suit much more effectively in "The Nutty Professor," follows in the extra-large footsteps of Martin Lawrence and Tyler Perry. They also played obese black women in bad movies, but those films don't come close to the hatefulness on display in "Norbit." It's a comedy for people who think misogyny is a laugh riot.

"Daddy Day Camp": At least Murphy had the common sense not to reprise his starring role in this sequel to "Daddy Day Care." Taking his place is Gooding, who has turned squandering talent into an art form. After winning his Oscar for "Jerry Maguire" in 1996, he has appeared in more gobblers than trot around Bongi's Turkey Roost in Duxbury. Anyone care to take a cruise on "Boat Trip"?

"Good Luck Chuck": Normally I don't like trashing thespians who hail from the Bay State, but Arlington's Dane Cook deserves a lengthy stay in a Dumpster for this piece of garbage. A more appropriate title would be "Upchuck Chuck" since it induces more vomiting than laughter.

"Southland Tales": Self-indulgent, pretentious and completely incomprehensible. And those are film's best characteristics. Forget even trying to describe this movie from Richard Kelly of "Donnie Darko" fame. Let's just say it takes place in the near future after unpleasant things have happened, such as a nuclear explosion. Exposure to radioactive fallout would be preferable to sitting through this very long exercise in banality.

"Wild Hogs": An "Easy Rider" film for men going through a midlife crisis turns into an excuse to ridicule homosexuals. When John Travolta's film isn't being mean-spirited, it's being mindless as our four bikers head out on the highway, looking for adventure and whatever comes their way. Like a gay cop.

"The Heartbreak Kid": When the list of worst remakes of all time gets drawn up, this film will be on it. Where the original, starring Charles Grodin, Cybill Shepherd and Jeannie Berlin, was hilariously horrifying — or horrifyingly hilarious — the remake (with Ben Stiller) is just dumb and raunchy.

"Are We Done Yet?": This rotten film is a sequel to an equally rotten film called "Are We There Yet?" Why make a sequel of a film that was rotten the first time around?

"Because I Said So": Seldom has a romantic comedy been less romantic and less comedic. It does have a surplus of cliches, though. Diane Keaton plays a meddlesome mom of three daughters who tries her darnedest to get her youngest hitched. The film makes you long for the maternal stylings of Joan Crawford.

"Evan Almighty": As anyone who saw "The 40-Year-old Virgin" knows, Concord native Steve Carell is a funny guy. He's just a lot less funny as a 40-year-old Noah in "Evan Almighty." Unfortunately, the proceedings are about as amusing as a flood.

"Georgia Rule": Last and quite possibly least, we have this film, which could play on a dysfunctional double bill with "Because I Said So." Here, double Oscar-winner Jane Fonda plays a meddlesome mother to Felicity Huffman and hard-love grandmother to Lindsay Lohan. Described as a comedy, the film features a disturbing child rape subplot. Ha ha.

Little Harbor, big construction

Sewer, water work under way

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's the largest single municipal undertaking the likes Cohasset has never seen. It's invasive and expansive but the results could change a portion of Cohasset for the better from an environmental and real estate standpoint. School building projects aside, the $15.2 million price tag dwarfs anything done previously.

As residents in the Little Harbor district are well aware, water and sewer improvements of great proportion are currently underway. Day in and day out work is being done beneath the streets of Cohasset to bring municipal sewer service to 487 additional homes and to improve an aging water distribution system.

With a project of such a large scope, several different organizations are involved in bringing the project to a reality. The Mariner sat down with the key players involved in the project to hear about their role in keeping work plugging along through the cold winter months. They talked about the challenge of Cohasset's infamous ledge, about a resident bringing them a cake at the holidays and, because of spotty cell phone coverage, keeping in touch through long-range radio communication.

To give an idea of just how much sewer and water work is involved in the project, at the end of two-year timeframe (finishing sometime in

While working on Rust Way on Tuesday morning, a worker from LM Holdings chips away at the ledge, which is the most challenging part of installing the sewer and water lines in the area.

CHS turf gets thumbs up

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The wheels are in motion for a field of dreams at the Cohasset Middle-High School's Alumni Field. Members from the Cohasset Sports Partnership came before the Selectmen Monday night to discuss a preliminary proposal to build a turf field, a big-ticket item with an estimated cost between $1 and 1.5 million.

The Cohasset Sports Partnership is a new organization in town modeled after a similar organization in Hingham, said member George McGoldrick. Describing the group as an umbrella organization for the booster clubs, about 10 parent representatives have joined representing a cross section of booster clubs. In addition to investigating the feasibility of large project, like the turf field, the Sports Partnership will also be a fundraising committee.

"This one particular project is too big for any one booster club to take on," said Sports Partnership member Bill Cavanaro.

The Sports Partnership was looking for the Selectmen's support to pursue the project, begin fundraising and possibly sit on a turf field committee.

"Land is so valuable and there are few large parcels available. A turf field

Board split on perc tests

Affordable housing is eyed for parcel

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In a split vote, the Board of Selectmen authorized the first step toward exploring affordable housing on a town-owned parcel. The Housing Partnership Committee requested Selectmen approval to do multiple perc tests on a plot of land that backs up to the South Shore Music Circus.

"We're just asking to explore the possibility."
— Tom Callahan, Housing Partnership co-chairman.

The currently overgrown 14 acres could hold the future possibility of 10 to 25 affordable housing units, if the perc tests reveal a portion of the land is buildable. The land, located between Pleasant Street, Sohier Street and Ripley Road, is a combination of wetlands, ledge, overgrown vegetation and varying topography. It is likely only a relatively small portion of the land — four to five acres — could be developed, said Housing Partnership co-chairman Clark Brewer.

The perc tests and associated results are preliminary analysis to give the town and the partnership the information it needs to determine if and how much housing is possible on the site. A perc test is a soil analysis to determine if the land is suitable for a septic system.

New eatery in the Village

Café Zuppa opens Monday

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"Laughter is brighter where food is best."

This is the philosophy behind Café Zuppa, a new breakfast and lunch place opening Monday in the village. A sign hanging above the entrance to the kitchen proclaims their philosophy to customers.

"We want customers to come to a party everyday, with fresh, wholesome, comfort food, great music and great hospitality," says co-owner Vinette Hourihan. She hopes to differentiate herself from other restaurants by coupling a relaxed, cozy feel with simple and uncomplicated food.

Café Zuppa now occupies the space in the Village left vacant by the Silver Spoon. When co-owner and Cohasset resident Mary Troupe noticed the "for lease" sign in the window she and Hourihan almost immediately inquired about it.

"We loved the size and the feel of the place," says Troupe, "as soon as we walked in, we said this is the place."

The two have talked about opening a business together for years, but everything seemed to come together right now.

"It's been a lifelong dream of mine to owns a café," says Hourihan, who is no stranger to small business. She owns Vinette Day Spa in North Scituate where Troupe has worked for years.

Co-owners Mary Troupe and Vinette Hourihan stand outside their new restaurant, Café Zuppa, which opens Monday.

"...as soon as we walked in, we said this is the place."
— Mary Troupe, co-owner

"We have a great friendship and working relationship," says Troupe. Both have left the day-to-day operations at the spa to open the 20-seat Café Zuppa. Each will focus on their strengths and passions to make the business work. Hourihan, who loves to cook, plans on spending her time in kitchen and Troupe, who loves to entertain, will handle the hospitality end.

While many may think a switch from the spa industry to the restaurant industry is a big change, they don't see it that way. Both businesses are service-based and are about making people feel good.

Rash of pocketbook thefts reported

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"Criminals are not rocket scientists. If they find an easy way to get their hands on some money – they'll do it."
— Chief James Hussey

A woman in a hurry might grab some money from her purse and leave her pocketbook in her car while she runs into the store or post office.

A thief or thieves might be nearby and see the woman get out of the car without her pocketbook.

The end of this part of the story results in a crime of opportunity. The thief or thieves go up to the car, open an unlocked door, and grab the pocketbook.

This scenario has been repeated in recent weeks in Cohasset, Hingham and Weymouth, police say.

This past week, another incident was recorded in the Cohasset police log.

Police hope the final chapter of this saga will include catching those responsible. And to that end, Cohasset detectives are working with their counterparts in the affected towns as part of the investigation.

"Criminals are not rocket scientists," Police Chief James Hussey said. "If they find an easy way to get their hands on some money – they'll do it.

"It is so important that motorists put their valuables in the trunk or put them on the floor and cover them up – and always lock the car," he said.

Hingham police are investigating a total of five larcenies involving the theft of pocketbooks from cars over the past week. The details are similar. The victims are taking some money out of their purse and going into the store, leaving the pocketbook on the front seat in an unlocked car.

Hingham police said one of the pocketbooks was found on the side of a road in Hull.

On Thursday (Jan. 10) Cohasset police received a report from a woman who returned to her car after going inside Stop & Shop to find that her purse containing credit cards and other items was missing from the passenger side.

The week before, a woman reported a similar incident outside of Shaw's.

"Leaving car doors unlocked and valuables in plain sight is inviting criminals who are looking on getting some easy money," Hussey said.

Lightning

During last Friday's winter thunder-and-lightning storm, lightning apparently struck at or near a signal bungalow on the Greenbush line in Cohasset damaging electrical circuitry at three grade crossings (King, Sohier and Beechwood) where the gates stopped functioning properly.

A signal crew was dispatched to make repairs. The outbound train (#073) was delayed 16 minutes, MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said.

"At 10:45 a.m., repairs were completed and the gates returned to their normal operating modes," he said.

Pesaturo said there was never any danger. The crew of #073 was directed to stop before each of the three crossings before passing through. Gates were in the "down" position as the train traveled through. The next train (inbound) departed from Greenbush at 10:42 a.m., but the time it reached the Cohasset crossings, normal operations had resumed, he said.

Car windows

Police are investigating a recent rash of car vandalism that has involved smashed windows and broken mirrors, in some cases. Chief Hussey said there have been similar incidents in some other towns and detectives are investigating. It appears the vandalism is random in nature and not targeted at a specific individual or individuals. "We are working with other towns to see if our collective intelligence can lead to who is responsible," Hussey said.

No insurance

A car was towed and its registered owner summonsed to court after a traffic stop last week. At about 2:50 p.m. on Thursday (Jan. 10), an officer was traveling on Hull Street when the officer saw a car that had stopped in the middle of travel lane and was just sitting there.

A check of the plate through the cruiser's mobile data terminal revealed the registration had been revoked due to cancellation of insurance.

The registered owner also had an expired, non-renewable license, police said.

The operator had an active license and did not realize the car was uninsured. Police had the car towed because it had no insurance. The operator and two passengers left on foot. The owner of the car, a 39-year-old Scituate man, is being summonsed on the charge of allowing a motor vehicle without insurance to remain in a public way.

Expired license

A 44-year-old Cohasset woman is being summonsed to court on the charge of unlicensed operation after she was stopped for speeding last week. The officer who was headed south on Route 3A turned around and pulled the woman over near the intersection of 3A and Pond Street. Further investigation revealed that she was driving on an expired license.

Car accident

A 2005 Dodge that is registered to and was being operated by a Cohasset resident was traveling on Forest Avenue at 10:45 a.m. on Sunday (Jan. 13) when it slid into a stonewall when trying to make a right onto Cedar Acres Lane, police said. The driver was cited for failure to slow down when approaching an intersection and failure to have a license his possession. There were three other people in the car. The passenger in the front seat was transported to the hospital with what appeared to be minor injuries, police said.

On Jan. 10 another car veered onto the tracks at the N. Main Street grade crossing. This was the sixth such mishap. Greenbush liaisons for the town, Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan, report that later the same day as last week's incident, the MBTA had work crews on site to repaint the lines. For more information, see Making Tracks on page 11.

Another seat opens for Rec. Comm.

A two-year seat on the Recreation Commission is now available. Ted Carroll submitted a letter of resignation this past week citing increased work responsibilities. Carroll has been involved in Cohasset Recreation for the past three decades as an employee, summer program director and commissioner.

"It has been a distinct pleasure to have been associated with the organization since I began in high school helping with the sports programs," Carroll wrote.

The Board of Selectmen voted to include the vacancy on the April 5 election ballot. There is also an open five-year Recreation Commission seat. Interested citizens can pull nomination papers at the Town Clerk's office between now and Feb. 14.

Little Harbor sewer water work under way

2009) about 10 miles of sewer pipe and three miles of water pipe will have been laid into the ground.

On the town side the Water Commission and the Sewer Commission serve an executive role over the project. While typically water and sewer projects can't be done simultaneously because of funding availability, for this project both parties had funding in line, said Water Commission chairman Glenn Pratt.

By doing both the water and sewer pieces in one large project disruption to the neighborhoods is minimized because the street doesn't have to be dug up (and repaved) two times, he said. The project breaks down to roughly one-third water to two-thirds sewer. Pratt estimates the water work, including drainage, will cost about $5 million, with the entire project coming in the neighborhood of $15 million.

"We don't get involved in the day to day operation but we do stay cognizant of what's going on. We don't interject in to the field" leaving it to the experts to engineer and construct, said Sewer Commissioner John Beck. Beyond the two commissions, the project permeates a cross-section of town departments. Police and fire officials are called upon for details. School transportation has to be altered due to construction on occasion. The Town Manager's office often receives calls. The DPW will be paving the streets once all work is complete.

Paul Cappelletti, project manager from LM Holdings, points to the new sewer line that they are now installing along Rust Way. Paul estimates that the sewer line at Rust Way will be completed in about a month.

On the engineering side, Stoneham-based Coughlin Environmental Services is serving as the town's agent, designing and overseeing all aspects of the project's sewer engineering plans.

Kevin McRae is in the midst of it all as the resident engineer. He spends his days throughout Little Harbor and in the staging area trailer on Jerusalem Road. Dan Coughlin, principal of the firm, is deeply involved in the project.

...at the end of two-year timeframe (finishing sometime in 2009) about 10 miles of sewer pipe and three miles of water pipe will have been laid into the ground.

He started his firm in 2005 after working for Tutela Engineering Associates for over two decades.

Tutela Engineering is involved in the project as well supervising the water portion's design and installation. Tutela has worked with the town on various water, sewer and drainage projects since 1991.

For LM Holdings, the project contractor, this is dollar size their largest project to date. Although a relatively new company that got its start in 2005, the nucleus of the company have worked together for years.

"We have the experience. We know what our employees can do and how to work best together," said Steve Harrington, Vice President of LM Holdings. He and president Massimo Marino worked together at Modern Continental for 25 years doing projects in the hundreds of millions before striking out on their own. The Westford-based company employs about 75 people doing heavy civil engineering for municipalities and private developers.

Although based on the North Shore, LM Holding has some employees based in Hull who can respond quickly if there is an emergency outside of business hours.

"The sewer and water commissions spent a lot of time checking references. We checked (the firms) out pretty carefully and were convinced they could do the job," said Pratt.

The entire operation involves extensive coordination and constant communication. Four separate crews, each with about three workers, disperse from the staging area on Jerusalem Road to different streets in Little Harbor. The 16 LM Holdings employees meet each morning for a safety meeting with supervisors then, in most cases, return to the site they were working on the day before.

"Our first priority is to get the job done safely then on time and on budget," said Beck. This week, crews were on Deep Run, Rust Way, Nichols Road and Whitehead Road. The streets are all at differing levels of completion.

Over the next few weeks, McRae expects some crews will be moving on to portions of Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue. Their hope is to finish those scenic byways before the warmer months when Sunday drivers become more frequent and road races are scheduled.

Project challenges

The staging area on Jerusalem Road, although currently under an appeal with the Zoning Board of Appeals, is a huge asset to the contractor and the engineers, they say. In addition to the crews out on the street, a floating crew supports the contractors out in the field by bringing needed supplies to and from the staging area. Heavy equipment, stockpiles of excess dirt, pallets of pipes, huge containers of valves and miscellaneous items, such as boots and tools, are all on hand if needed.

"In a utility job like this, we need to have a variety of equipment on site, because there are a lot of unknowns out there," said Harrington. Tutela engineer John Ings said the staging area's central location minimizes downtime for all involved.

"There are a lot of unknowns out there," said LM Holdings project manager Paul Cappelleti. On any given day, while digging a trench they may come across something they weren't expecting. Having their material supply close by keeps work moving along, he said.

What has slowed down work at times is Cohasset's trademark ledge, which has stymied the contractor more than once in more than one location.

"I don't think the contractor appreciates the amount of ledge," quipped McRae. However, the engineers say they picked some tough spots to start work.

"It's definitely a challenge getting by it," said Cappelletti. For the most part, the contractor has been hammering away at the ledge, but may have to resort to blasting in some spots.

Another challenge they've come across is keeping in touch with each other. While on other jobs they frequently use cell phones to keep all the crews up to speed but, as residents well know, the town's coast does not have reliable cell phone coverage. They invested in a set of long-range hand held radios to communicate with each other.

"It's the best money we ever spent," said Cappelletti, "we're able to talk to everyone on the job no matter where they are."

Communication

The contractor and the engineers say have enjoyed a cooperative relationship with residents on the whole, despite the inconveniences they have caused by doing their job.

"Residents have been great, they want to work together with us. We've gotten some good feedback," said Cappelletti. Some homeowners have offered workers hot drinks, cookies, and one even brought a cake to the office around the holidays—gestures they still appreciate.

All involved with the project have tried to keep communication open with residents. Information on both the water and sewer improvements is available on their respective websites Sewer Commissioner John Beck has been writing occasional column in the Mariner. The staging area trailer has a direct line if there is ever an emergency or question. The water and sewer commissions held a neighborhood meeting before major construction began to address any concerns and answer any questions.

"Putting sewer into people home's is more intimate than water," said Coughlin. Each homeowner must decide where they want the sewer line to enter the home. Coughlin engineers have been talking to residents for close to a year about pumps and sewer access so when the time comes to connect to town sewer the process will go a little smoother.

"Resident engineers get to know people by name — not by address number. They're out on the street, knocking on doors and in people's cellars," said Tom Keeffe of Tutela Engineering.

End result

It's mandated by the state to have all 487 Little Harbor homes hooked up to the town sewer by 2012. A portion of those homes in the North Cohasset area could have the ability to hook up as soon as later this year. Those homes will be tied into the Hull wastewater treatment plant where capacity is already available.

Upgrades to the Cohasset wastewater treatment plant located on Elm Street are expected to be complete by late 2008. At the earliest, homes could begin to hook up to town sewer in spring 2009, the tie-ins are expected be phased so everyone is not coming online at the same time.

"A reliable wastewater system is a great benefit to the homeowner," said Coughlin. Little Harbor, which has poor water quality largely due to poorly functioning septic systems, is expected to reap environmental benefits. By sewering the area, the nutrient source will be removed, which will improve the health of the water ecosystem, said Coughlin.

Questions about any aspect of the work should be addressed to Kevin McRae, resident engineer for the town's contractor, Coughlin Environmental Services LLC. His office is located in the construction trailer in the staging area off Jerusalem Road. The telephone number for the trailer, which will be staffed during normal working hours, is 781-383-2900.

Further information about the project can be found on the Water Department's website, www.cohassetwater.org and the Sewer Commission's website at www.townofcohasset.org.

Supt. Walsh named in federal lawsuit

School Committee not concerned

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"I have every confidence in her."
— Rick Flynn, School Committee

Cohasset Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh is a defendant in a lawsuit now pending in federal court that dates back to her prior position as head of Middleboro Public Schools.

A former Middleboro student and his parents name Walsh, along with other school officials and the town of Middleboro, in the civil suit. Court documents state the town and its officials failed to warn parents and students about a former teacher's alleged inappropriate conduct and contact with students in Middleboro and at a prior position at a parochial school. The failure, the suit claims, caused serious physical and emotional injury to their family and increased the likelihood of danger to the student. The student was sexually assaulted shortly after the teacher was fired from the Middleboro school system.

School Committee members when contacted this week are aware of the lawsuit, but they are not particularly concerned.

"It hasn't affected her [Walsh's] performance on a professional level," said School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, "I have every confidence in her."

The Patriot Ledger ran a front-page story detailing the lawsuit on Tuesday, Jan. 8. Following the Ledger's story, at least two school committee members spoke to Walsh about it privately. At last week's School Committee budget meeting, an executive session — closed to the public — was held to discuss the lawsuit.

"It's really old news, it happened four years ago," said Walsh in a phone interview this week, "it is an action against the town of Middleboro."

The lawsuit was filed in the U.S. District Court in December 2006, but it is still in a preliminary stage. The family is seeking $1 million for their son's emotional and physical injuries, according to court documents.

Gregory Pathiakis, the former Middleboro math and science teacher, pled guilty to charges of child rape and possession of child pornography in January 2005. Pathiakis is also named as a defendant in the lawsuit. He was arrested in January 2004 for raping the boy in December 2003.

This all happened before Walsh came to Cohasset in July 2004. The Middleboro schools did not employ the teacher at the time, School Committee member Alfred Slanetz points out.

"I don't think she would purposefully endanger a child, she's a good person," said Slanetz in a phone interview, adding she has devoted her professional career to education.

Flynn said there are no plans to discuss the lawsuit at an open meeting, "it's nothing that affects the town of Cohasset.

Artificial turf for Alumni Field on the table

"I don't see it as a school project, it's a townwide project."
— George McGoldrick, Cohasset Sports Partnership

supplements two to three other fields and can be used for multiple sports," said McGoldrick. The turf field, as opposed to real grass, can withstand intense rainfall. Typically on a grass field if there is a game held in rainy weather — and the mud that comes with it — the field consequently must be closed to repair itself.

Back in November, the School Committee invited representatives from a turf field manufacturer to one of its meetings. Benefits included field longevity (10-15 years) and lowering the cost of annual field maintenance.

The conversation on a turf field intensified last year when the school came to the Capital Budget Committee requesting $45,000 to repair Alumni's track and field, said School Committee chairman Rick Flynn. At that time a turf field was only a distant dream, but the Capital Budget Committee didn't want to fund $45,000 to repair a field if a replacement turf field was a few years down the line. Instead $5,000 was authorized to repair the track to last a few more years.

"When we are figuring out if this turf field is worth it, we have to weigh in the needed repairs to the present field," said Flynn. Currently, Alumni Field suffers from drainage issues as well.

Because of the great expense of the turf field proposal, the members of the Sports Partnership suggested combining private funding with town funding. Some towns with turf fields have received federal grants and/or applied for Community Preservation funds. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer encouraged the partnership to look at different "buckets of money" to fund the project, adding if private funding could bring the cost of the field below $1 million, the project could be more palatable.

"I don't see it as a school project, it's a townwide project," said McGoldrick.

The Selectmen were unanimous in supporting the idea of the project and gave their blessing for the partnership to begin fundraising. Selectman Vice Chair Ted Carr volunteered to serve as liaison to the turf field committee.

"We have a strong committee with different demographics and (the field) does touch a lot of people in town," said McGoldrick. If the funding comes together, the partnership was hopeful the field construction could break ground in spring 2009.

Resident concerned about lack of sidewalks

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"We've got a lot of requests, we have to figure out which ones are practical."
— Selectman Ralph Dormitzer

The lack of sidewalks in key areas of town is becoming an issue before the Board of Selectmen with increasing frequency. In the last few months, three citizens have come to a meeting to discuss the need for more sidewalks.

Despite the issue being brought up by individuals, Chairman Gary Vanderweil is wondering if others in the community are equally as concerned with the lack of sidewalks — and which ones are most important.

"Just because there is one proponent with a special pet request doesn't mean that's the (project) we should do," said Vanderweil. The residents of Sanctuary Pond Road (Rose Hill development) petitioned the town to build a sidewalk from their street to King Street so residents could walk to the train station. Howie Altholtz of 4 Cedar Ledge came before the Selectmen to discuss the possibility of a sidewalk on North Main Street from Forest Avenue to the train station.

Now, Martha Gjesteby of 81 Old Pasture Road was the latest citizen to come forward with sidewalk concerns. She identified three streets in town that beg for sidewalks because of safety concerns. Sidewalks near the schools were first on her list.

A part of Pleasant Street, often used by children and young mothers with carriages making there way to the elementary schools, needs a complete sidewalk. Right now, pedestrians are forced to go into the street while walking, said Gjesteby.

Sohier Street from Route 3A to Fair Oaks Lane lacks a sidewalk making it dangerous for anyone to traverse, she said. A sidewalk exists on the other side of Fair Oaks, linking that neighborhood to the schools and village.

Lastly, Gjesteby encouraged the Selectmen to petition the state and the MBTA to build a sidewalk on Route 3A, a state-owned highway, from Pond Street to the train station.

"They might be able to do something for us, it's a safety issue," said Gjesteby, "with the high price of energy, I think more people would think of walking" particularly increased development along Route 3A, including a shopping plaza next to the train station.

"We've got a lot of requests, we have to figure out which ones are practical," said Selectman Ralph Dormitzer. The board briefly discussed possibly revitalizing the Sidewalk Committee to evaluate and prioritize resident's sidewalk concerns or incorporating sidewalks construction into the capital budget.

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

GO PATS

Hello Cohasset. Well, we have had it all so far, snow, rain, ice, cold, warm and wind! Now we have a weekend with some sort of important game or something happening on Sunday (ok fine, VERY IMPORTANT, GO PATS) and it is going to be really cold. Make sure if you are not going to the game to be inside enjoying warmth, good food and drinks and most of all, HAVE FUN and stay safe. Send me in some of your news and fun stories as well for next weeks column. A new baby to announce in the column along with several events to help get through the winter in fun and style.

NEW ARRIVAL

Amelia Kay Palmer arrived Nov. 12.

Nathaniel and Heather Palmer are please to announce the arrival of their daughter Amelia Kay Palmer, born Nov. 12th at 10:10 a.m. She was 7pounds 8 ounces and was 20-1/2 inches at birth. She was welcomed home to Cohasset by her exhausted parents, loving big brother Nathaniel M. Palmer, and ecstatic grandmother Pamela Palmer.

Please join the Cohasset Clergy and the Diversity Committee in honoring the memory and achievements of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. at Cohasset's 7th annual Martin Luther King Day Breakfast. The breakfast will be held on Monday, Jan. 21 at St. Anthony Parish Center, 10 Summer St. from 9 – 11 a.m.. A pancake breakfast will be served from 9 – 10 a.m. followed by an uplifting program honoring the memory of Dr. King. The cost is $5 per person, $15 per family. The featured speaker will be Richard Tarlaian, a certified trainer in Kingian Non-Violence at the University of Rhode Island Center for Nonviolence and Peace Studies. Mr. Tarlaian will explain how the Kingian Philosophy of nonviolence based on agape or unconditional, forgiving love has been successfully employed to work through apparently irreconcilable conflicts to build healthy interpersonal and community relations. Childcare will be provided by CMHS's Peer Leaders. For more information please call Connie Afshar at 781 383 6006.

DROWNED HOGS

Feb. 2nd, Ground Hog day in America, and more notably for South Shore residents, Drowned Hog Day in Hull! For the 13th year, the Drowned Hogs will storm Nantasket Beach and make their mad dash into the Atlantic Ocean. At noon, on Saturday, Feb. 2, hundreds of hardy nutcases committed to doing something cool and crazy for a cause — Wellspring Multi-Service Center — will predict spring's arrival.

All Cohasset residents, individuals, teams, groups or families with warm hearts willing to do something chill for charity are welcome to join the craziness! Information and pledge sheets are available at www.drowned-hogs.org or www.well-springhull.org. Registration fee is $10 and includes the eagerly awaited 02-02-08 Drowned Hog T-Shirt and a Drowned Hog button entitling the wearer to discounts at participating restaurants and shops all weekend. Following the icy plunge at high noon, survivors and onlookers are all invited to warm up at the Nantasket Beach Chamber of Commerce's Drowned Hog Soup and Chowder Fest at the Red Parrot. Last year's defending champion, Weinberg's Bakery, will be challenged by scrumptious offerings from Jakes, Barefoot Bob's, Café Ona, Hole in the Wall, L St. Deli, Ocean Club, Red Parrot, Schooner's and Toast. Tickets are $10. All proceeds will benefit the food pantry at Wellspring.

DELICIOUS COLORS

The South Shore Art Center has selected these three Gallery Artists to show their work in its satellite gallery until the end of January. Filling the walls of the lower level of the Conservatory, in the South Shore Music Circus Gallery, are watercolors and oils by JoAnne and pastels, acrylics, and oils by Diana; oil paintings by Dianne are upstairs, in the Palmer Gallery. The Conservatory is located at One Conservatory Drive, off Fort Hill Street, in Hingham (781-749-7565, ext. 10). Hours are M — F 8:30 a.m. — 9 p.m.; Sat. 9 a.m. — noon. The event benefits the Cohasset Hockey team and promises to rockin' time for everyone. If you didn't make it last year, don't miss it this year. It's a great way to shake off the doldrums of winter and have a fun night out with friends in Cohasset. The date is Feb. 1 from 8 pm-midnight with Classic and current rock provided by the "GR8FLS". Tickets are $20 and are available at the door or through any hockey team member or parent. Appetizers and a cash bar will be there and it will be a super nite of fun. PENGUIN PLUNGE

Julian Herth, a freshman at Cohasset High School, will swim in the coldest water temperatures of the year to raise money for Farmsteads of New England and Special Olympics. He will make the three-generational plunge into the frigid North Atlantic waters in Hampton, N.H, on Sunday, Feb. 3, in conjunction with the Special Olympics Penguin Plunge to raise awareness and funds for Farmsteads of New England and Special Olympics. The three generations include his grandfather, Fred DeScenza, of DeScenza Diamonds, who will celebrate his 80th year and his aunt Deborah DeScenza, Founder and Director of Farmsteads of New England.

Since 2003, Farmsteads of New England, founded by Deborah DeScenza, has provided day and residential services for young adults with autism and developmental disabilities in a farming environment at Rosewald Farm in Hillsborough, N.H. Deborah's goal is to have her farmers go to bed at night having had a full day, feeling proud of themselves for having accomplished something important and feeling content, knowing that they have friends, a home and a good life. At Farmsteads of New England, small tasks give them purpose, such as giving hay to the animals, picking vegetables in season, helping to bake cookies for the farmstand, making small crafts, working out on the treadmill and exercise equipment with mentor supervision, and having friends and a place of their own. For more information on Farmsteads of New England, visit www.farmsteads-ne.org.

This is much needed, as there is no other service like this for them in New England. Imagine a parent who must have their child in sight 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and the impossible job it becomes, especially if you are a single parent. To meet the ever-growing need, FNE has just completed 8 of the 24 additional one-bedroom apartments. Funding is needed for the next eight units, so plunge deep and join Julian, Fred and Deborah in their efforts by donating to raise these much-needed funds. Donations in support of our Cohasset freshman, Julian Herth's efforts may be sent to Farmsteads of New England, 213 Center Road, Hillsborough, N.H. 03244. Naming rights are available for major donations. For information, call Deborah at 603-464-2590.

That is it for this week. Please send me all of your news, event information and stories in written form either electronically or by mail as I will no longer accept phone messages due to glitches and erased calls etc

"I'm excited to feed all my clients, I've made them look great on the outside, now I can make them feel good on inside," says Hourihan.

The duo have spent the next few months preparing the business for opening, "we gutted it and renovated the whole space from floors to walls. Everything is brand spanking new," says Troupe. Both women love to decorate so they looked through magazines and visited other area cafes for ideas. Hourihan's husband, Kevin, has helped the women bring their vision to reality by doing the majority of the renovation work.

The result is an inviting space with rich golden yellow walls, with red and green accents. The back wall is covered with a green patterned tin to add texture and depth to the space. An oversized clock hangs over an antiqued yellow bureau where coffee will be available. The restaurant is outfitted with wireless internet to encourage patrons to settle in and stay awhile.

"I want people to come here and not want to leave because it's so cozy," says Hourihan. But, the owners also want people to come because of the good food and hospitality.

"My mother and grandmother are Italian so I learned the values of good food and good hospitality very early on," says Hourihan, who credits her mother for her love of cooking. She plans on using her creativity in the kitchen to come up with daily specials and distinctive soups. She hopes her soups become what the restaurant is known for, those who know Italian will recognize "zuppa" as soup in that language. The business's icon features a steaming bowl of soup, fresh out of the kitchen.

A few of her favorite recipes include Tuscan minestrone, organic lentil with pancetta, pasta fagioli, and roasted potato with cheddar broccoli. In addition to the soups the lunch menu will feature homemade sauces, fresh salads, sandwiches and Italian favorites, like eggplant parmesan.

Vinette Hourihan and Mary Troupe, co-owners of Café Zuppa in Cohasset Village, stand by the oversized clock that hangs over an antiqued yellow bureau where coffee will be available.

Don't expect a bacon and egg breakfast special on the menu, says Hourihan, rather a break from the norm with a European café twist on breakfast. Lighter and more wholesome fare will be offered: oatmeal with brown sugar and apples, hard boiled eggs, organic vanilla yogurt with raspberries and blueberries, and bagels. Jim's organic coffee and espresso will also be staples on the menu. At both breakfast and lunch take-out will be available if a customer is just looking for a quick bite.

The women exude passion and excitement for their new venture and hope to get to know their customers each by name.

"The community and the village has such a great feel," says Troupe, "we hope people will come and feel at home here."

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

One hundred years ago, Cove Bridge Road at Cohasset Harbor was a busy business center. Stores such as Sylvester's Fish Market and Caleb Nichol's Supply Company flourished. While these establishments are long gone, the house in the background of the photograph still stands, easily identifiable today.

Jan has a master's degree in marriage and family therapy, and is a certified school adjustment counselor who has taught active parenting courses for more than a decade.

The program will focus on discipline methods that work, how to prevent tantrums, how to make rules your child will follow, routines that make life easier, how to care for your child at different stages and great ways to take care of yourself. Participants will meet other parents of toddlers and preschoolers and discover what a wonderful difference the program will make for themselves and their families.

The program will take place Tuesdays, Jan. 29, and Feb. 5 and 12, in the livingroom of First Parish. There is a choice of two sessions, 9:15 to 11:15 a.m. or 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The cost is $100 per person for First Parish members and $120 for nonmembers. Last year more than 350 flags were installed on the town-owned island at the corner of Border and Summer streets across from Veterans Memorial Park.

Second annual 'Healing Field' planned

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Thomas Wigmore, commander of the local chapter of the Sons of the American Legion, hopes to make the Healing Field an annual tradition in Cohasset.

Last year more than 350 flags installed on the town-owned island at the corner of Border and Summer streets across from Veterans Memorial Park created a breathtaking, dramatic display and provided a means for many citizens, organizations and businesses to honor men and women currently serving, those who have served, and those who have made the supreme sacrifice for security and freedom.

Wigmore plans to install a Healing Field as part of the town's Memorial Day 2008 observances and says photos of the display sent overseas last year lifted the spirits of the deployed troops.

"It was a big plus for troops over in Iraq and Afghanistan to see how much is being done even by a small town like Cohasset to show support," Wigmore said.

This year's effort could result in upwards of 400 American flags on eight-foot-tall poles in perfect rows installed on the island that faces Veterans Memorial Park where the annual Memorial Day observances are held, and on the island at the top of Elm Street across from the Cohasset Harbor Inn.

Wigmore explains having enough lead-time is critical in order for the effort to be successful. He would like to have the flags ordered as soon as possible, with orders in place by April 1.

"This is something the whole community can be involved in," says Wigmore, who is a former national chairman of the Sons, a group made up of men whose fathers, stepfathers, or grandfathers are veterans.

The flags sell for $25 and can be dedicated to anyone. In other words, the purchase of a flag is not limited to those honoring someone who is serving or has served in the Armed Forces.

Those who purchase flags may take them home after the field is taken down the Saturday after Memorial Day. The Healing Field will be up from May 18-31.

Wigmore is also looking for sponsors who would pay $100 to have their name on a special banner.

The Healing Field is one in a long line of community efforts supported by the George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 on Summer Street , the Sons, and the Women's Auxiliary. Tom's father, Steve Wigmore, is the long-time commander of the Post.

The Legion works hand-in-hand annually with the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 9146, headed by Ralph Perroncello, to organize the most visible effort: Cohasset's annual Memorial Day Parade and observances.

Behind the scenes, the Legion and Sons have donated $10,000 to the war memorial project at Veterans Memorial Park. The Legion also supports Legion baseball, and the Sons support Boys and Girls State - a program sending talented students away for a week to learn about government. The organizations, including the Women's Auxiliary, also help homeless veterans and other groups.

Healing Field flags are $25. Checks should be made out to the Sons of the American Legion, with a note on the memo line indicating "Healing Field" and sent to Sons of the American Legion, PO Box 118, Cohasset, MA 02025. For more information, contact the Legion post at 781-383-9657 or stop by the pos tat 98 Summer St. any weekday after 3 p.m., Saturdays after 10 a.m. or Sundays after 12 noon. Applications for Healing Field flags are available at the Post. All proceeds will go to veterans projects of the Sons of the American Legion.

"We're just asking to explore the possibility," said Tom Callahan, Housing Partnership co-chairman.

Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil and Ralph Dormitzer had concerns about taking this initial step toward affordable housing.

To Vanderweil, the idea of building affordable housing on town-owned land was reminiscent of the town's failed pursuit to build senior affordable housing on the Cook Estate off Sohier Street and did not want to go down that road again.

"I'm not sure if I want housing there," said Vanderweil, adding open space might be more palatable for residents. Callahan said many questions had to be answered before the building of affordable housing, but if a project ever came to fruition the development would be rather unobtrusive to the neighborhood.

Dormitzer's concerns lay with about the political ramifications of performing perc tests on the land.

"The perc testing presupposes the (development) will be done," said Dormitzer, "I'd like to get a consensus from the town whether they want it done."

In a phone interview, Dormitzer said he would have liked to see the partnership meet and talk with the neighbors, even before they perform the perc tests.

"Approach the process in a way where neighbors feel informed and listened to," said Dormitzer.

The Housing Partnership is bringing two articles before Annual Town Meeting, one to establish a housing trust fund and another to fund the account. The articles will spark the type of debate the affordable housing issue in Cohasset needs, said Dormitzer, "you're going to find out if everyone is supportive."

Selectman Fred Koed had mixed feelings on the effort, although he ultimately voted in favor of it. While he said he was not opposed to getting information, he was concerned the partnership was not approaching the project the right way again.

The Housing Partnership received opposition from neighbors after proposing plans to create seven units of affordable housing at 25 Ripley Road. The opposition ultimately derailed the project and the committee moved on to other opportunities.

"Everyone is in favor of affordable housing until they find out where it is," said Koed.

Callahan said they couldn't answer any questions about potential development until they knew what they had to work with. The partnership is looking at this potential project as bringing the town up to the 10 percent threshold required under state Chapter 40-B, which required towns to have at least 10 percent affordable housing stock.

Although the partnership received Selectmen approval to perform the perc tests on the land, there are several other steps they need to take. They plan on seeking $15,000 to $20,000 in Community Preservation funding at the upcoming Town Meeting for the project. The money will pay for six to eight perc tests and the associated engineering analysis.

COURTESY OF THE COHASSET HOUSING PARTNERSHIP

Area once considered for school complex

The property described by the Cohasset Housing Partnership to the Board of Selectman on Monday, Jan. 14 is approximately 15 acres bounded by Deer Hill School, Sohier Street behind the Music Circus, the Greenbush tracks and portions of Smith Place and Pleasant Street. It was originally privately owned woods and pasture land and was taken by the town in the 1970s by eminent domain when a campus-like school complex at Deer Hill was envisioned before the present rebuilding of the schools required less land use than anticipated.

According to Dave Wadsworth, who remembers the land from his boyhood, you could walk from the Common, cross Ripley Road, cross the old unfenced railroad tracks, cross a bridge over James Brook and climb the hill to the upper pastures and woodlands which was the western portion of the property abutting Deer Hill. The town map bound in the 1898 edition of E. Victor Bigelow's "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume I" shows much of the land was cleared, intermixed with stands of deciduous trees. A neighbor who built a home on Pleasant Lane in the 1950s recalls walking from his home through the property on a summer evening to listen to the Music Circus. Over 10 years ago, the property was considered a potential sight for expanding Cohasset's cemetery plots, but the idea was abandoned due to some neighborhood opposition and the expansion needs being relieved by the development of the Woodside Cemetery. Within the past five years, fieldstones were removed for building some of the stonework at the Memorial Park in the harbor.

Today the property is heavily overgrown with deciduous and evergreen trees with dense growths of brambles and poison ivy, virtually impassable during the growing season. The upper property bounding the Deer Hill School, Pleasant Lane and the first parking lot of the Music Circus is relatively dry with old stonewalls and cedar fence posts indicating the agricultural use of the land at the turn of the 19th and 20th centuries. The lower portion of property, through which James Brook flows, is bounded by the Greenbush tracks and Smith Place. It has several large boulders and is considered too wet to be buildable.

A dream for all time

In some ways, it seems so long ago.

The young adults reading this page were not even born when the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. stood on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington D.C. on Aug. 23, 1963 to address a crowd of more than 200,000 during the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom:

"I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal.'"

Dr. King's renowned "I Have A Dream" speech is considered a defining moment in the American Civil Rights movement.

Yet, for those who witnessed his eloquence, it seems only yesterday that the compelling voice of the Rev. Martin Luther King rang out for freedom.

His message espoused nonviolence. His methods might have appeared physically passive, but were spiritually aggressive.

Looking back, assessing the progress of King's dream, and looking ahead to how much work remains to be done, that day on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial doesn't seem so far away after all.

In these past decades, how far have we come?

King strove tirelessly for the rights of all people until his assassination in Memphis, Tenn. on April 4, 1968.

So many years ago, King proclaimed:

"Let freedom ring. And when this happens, and when we allow freedom to ring - when we let it ring from every village and every hamlet, from every state and every city, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God's children - black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics - will be able to join hands and sing in the words of the old Negro spiritual: "Free at last! Free at last! Thank God Almighty, we are free at last!"

The dream of freedom is a dream we all share.

As the years unfold, the dream of Martin Luther King Jr. is carried on in the hearts and actions of people who practice tolerance and seek fair treatment for all men and women.

These are the people who honor Dr. King in the highest of ways, by putting his creed into practice.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. continues to inspire people to hold on to their dreams... and to hold on to their ideals while striving for their dreams.

Martin Luther King Jr. breakfast

Join the Cohasset Clergy and the Cohasset Diversity Committee to honor the memory and achievements of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. at Cohasset's seventh annual Martin Luther King Day Breakfast, to be held from 9 to 11 a.m., Monday, Jan. 21, at the St. Anthony Parish Center. The cost is $5 per person and $15 per family. A hearty breakfast of fresh pastries, fruit salad, sausages, pancakes, fruit juices, milk, coffee and tea will be served, followed by an uplifting program honoring the memory of Dr. King.

The featured speaker will be Richard Tarlaian, a certified trainer in Kingian Non-Violence at the University of Rhode Island Center for Nonviolence and Peace Studies. Mr. Tarlaian, a retired captain of the Providence Police Department will explain the Six Principals of Kingian Nonviolence and the Six Steps methodology for solving problems. King's Six Principals are commonly referred to as "The Will" and the Six Steps methodology as "The Skill."

Mr. Tarlaian will explain how the Kingian Philosophy of nonviolence based on agape or unconditional, forgiving love has been successfully employed to work through apparently irreconcilable conflicts to build healthy interpersonal and community relations.

Childcare will be provided by CMHS's peer leaders. For more information, call Connie Afshar at 781-383-6006.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thanks to the Cohasset Cultural Council

TO THE EDITOR:

Working closely with CMHS Drama supervisor Stephanie Noble, the Cohasset Middle High School Arts Boosters, spearheaded by Barbara Baumgarten, applied for and received great news that it is a 2008 Cohasset Cultural Council grant recipient. The Cohasset Cultural Council is a local agency, which is supported by the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

The grant will be used to help fund the Arts Boosters' sponsored HS Youth Drama Workshop that was instructed by Steve Dooner, drama professor, skilled actor, and experienced director for The Company Theatre, Fiddlehead Theatre, Bay Colony Orpheum Theater, Quincy College Drama Society and others (see 12/14/07 Mariner article). This workshop, which was free to interested students, was intended as an enrichment opportunity meant to bring the participants' craft to the next level. Students honed skills in: developing vocal techniques and delivery, shaping a dramatic scene, performing monologues, and practicing improvisation.

As these young actors prepare for competition in the Massachusetts High School Drama Guild Festival and varied performances for the Cohasset community, we are certain that they will embark with new confidence and a higher degree of professionalism.

On behalf of the students, faculty, parents and administration, we thank the Cohasset Cultural Council for giving the Arts a Boost!

Heartfelt thanks to firefighters

TO THE EDITOR:

I wish to express my belated thanks to Capt. Mark Trask and his firefighters for identifying an oil leak in our basement the week before Christmas.

There are too many details to outline, but because of the department's help we were able to avoid more serious problems.

The responders were notified and all arrived on the scene within hours.

Our life since then and those of our neighbors have been disrupted, but we are safe and in the supportive and professional hands of Green Environmental Services.

We look forward to the day when all will be back to "normal."

Many thanks to all.

HEALTH NOTES

Health effects of diesel fumes

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Recent study findings in the United States as well as abroad have conclusively linked the fumes emitted by running diesel engines, now used extensively by heavy motor vehicles, to asthma and reduced lung function. The fumes are particularly dangerous to young growing lungs of children. A recent California study found the fumes stunt crucial lung development in children between the ages of 10 and 18 and found "pronounced deficits" in lung development among children who lived closest to motorways even when factors such as exposure to cigarette smoke were factored in. Another study in the UK found "significantly reduced" rates of lung growth even in teenagers who had never experienced any asthma or respiratory illness.

BoH investigates diesel fumes in school buses — In the face of increasing evidence that the fumes from diesel engines are "insidious killers, subtly destroying the lungs of those inhaling them," the Board of Health will soon consider additional regulations covering the rise of diesel emissions in Cohasset. It's not as if there is no solution to the problem of pervasive diesel fumes, particularly where children are involved. Diesel buses regularly idle in schoolyards all over the country. In 2007, two of the largest school bus operators in the country operating some 10,000 school buses in 22 states, were sued and agreed to replace buses in some states or to retrofit them with low-emissions engines by 2014.

This year, the Board of Health will propose regulations covering the idling of buses in schoolyards.

Massachusetts has long had regulations, largely ignored, that fine owners of motor vehicles idling for more than five minutes. In fact, in 2003, after several complaints, Health Notes took up the cudgel about idling vehicles in town contributing to pollution. A local woman even led a campaign! Now that the dangers of diesel are better understood, and with the advent of diesel trains as well as school buses and heavy equipment all over town, it's time to do something.

This year, the Board of Health will propose regulations covering the idling of buses in schoolyards. There is no good purpose for these buses wasting fuel and giving off fumes inhaled by our children. The excuse is that they keep the buses warm for the kids. What mother sends her child to school without warm clothes in cold weather?

Preventing idling can help, but other measures are available. It's possible to reduce the emissions from the buses themselves by using fuel that gives off fewer emissions and by using newer buses with engines that are

Sixth car drives onto tracks

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush: First the not-so-good new: At about 6:15 a.m. on Thursday, Jan. 10th the sixth car drove off of the roadway onto the railroad tracks at the North Main Street crossing. Fortunately, the Cohasset safety forces were able to get the Greenbush line shut down before there was a loss of property or, heaven forbid, a loss of life. The car was removed by a wrecker and the railroad restored to service by about 7 a.m.. Shutting the Greenbush down clearly has an impact on its schedule. Further, since all three lines of the Old Colony share a single track between Braintree and Boston, a hiccup on any of the three lines can have schedule repercussions on the other two lines. In fact, we had a report that the 7:16 a.m. train left the station about six minutes earlier than it should have. We're guessing this was the MBTA trying to get their trains back into a workable schedule pattern.

Now, the good news: In last week's Mariner article we spoke briefly about the major meeting at the crossing at which the MBTA agreed to repaint the road lines at the crossing. Later the same day as the above incident, the MBTA had their work crews on site to repaint the lines. The MBTA erased the white lines that ran parallel to the tracks, which we believe may have led cars to turn to the right onto the tracks, especially in low light situations. Further, the white line at the edge of the road and the yellow line in the center of the road have been continued completely across the track area. So, the confusing lines have been eliminated and new lines direct the cars straight across the tracks. Keep in mind, the whole reason that the "standard" crossing design did not work well here is due to the extreme angle of the crossing.

King Street Greenbush Crossing: Ever since the train started running we have received numerous comments from residents about excess up and down gate operation at the Lower King Street crossing. One of the scenarios that gave rise to this jerky operation is as follows:

Work crew extending centerline at the N. Main Street crossing.

- Train pulls into the Cohasset station from Hingham, so the King St. gates come down
- Train stays in station a bit longer than it should, so with no train moving the gates go up.
- Train begins to move south toward Scituate from the Cohasset station, the gates come down.
- Train passes through crossing to the south, gates go up.

If you follow this up/down/up/down stuff you can see what's really happening and why the gates do what they do. But, because of the apparent confusion, the MBTA has lengthened the time that the gate waits before going back up in step 2, above. Thus, the gate will just stay down while the train is in the station. And, it will stay down until the train has crossed King Street on its way to Scituate. No more ups and downs!

Ridership: As those who read this column know, we love to collect arcane and miscellaneous information. So, with that in mind we thought we'd do a car count in the Greenbush parking lot this past Monday when Cohasset was projected to get a heavy snowfall (that never quite materialized). Well, you guessed it. The numbers show a 16% increase in cars in the parking lot. I guess we're not the only people who don't like to drive on slippery roads.

Growing up in the eighties

THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

On the small screen, long before "American Idol" churned out pop stars and women bonded over "Sex and the City," we watched "Fame" and followed female pals "Kate & Allie" and "Cagney & Lacey."

In my research about generational differences, I stumbled across some work by Morris Massey. His main theory is: "what you are, is where you were when" (the "where" refers to your coming-of-age years; and the "when" to significant events occurring during that time period). For example, if you came of age during the JFK years, you would have a very different view of government than those who grew up under later administrations.

Recent political contests and the start of the New Year brought Massey's theory to mind as 25 years ago, in 1983, I was smack dab in the middle of high school. So I took a look back at the significant events that shaped my views and those of my peers who came of age during the much maligned, but surprisingly progressive 1980s.

Pop Culture — In 1983, Madonna burst "Like a Virgin" onto the scene. Today this seems an almost tame way to introduce one's self compared to the Spears sisters' rallying cry of "Oops, I did it again and again and, yep, make that once again." Of course, back then Paris was just a city; ankle bracelets were just jewelry; and the only Ritchie we knew was crooning, "Once, Twice, Three Times a Lady."

Twenty-five years ago before satellite radio and iTunes, Sting was a Police-man watching every breath we took and John Mellencamp was still a Cougar. At the box office, Tom Cruise had his first taste of "Risky Business," Matthew Broderick played "War Games" and Jennifer Beals had us ripping our sweatshirts and dancing like maniacs – a "Flashdance" trend most of us would like to forget. Earlier in 1983, the Academy honored "Ghandi" leading a nation; Richard Gere carrying Debra Winger "up where we belong"; Dustin Hoffman dressing in drag; and an alien phoning home.

On the small screen, long before "American Idol" churned out pop stars and women bonded over "Sex and the City," we watched "Fame" and followed female pals "Kate & Allie" and "Cagney & Lacey." Yet, not all female television characters were friends, as 1983 was the year that Joan Collins and Linda Evans took their famous tumble into the lily pond on "Dynasty." (I'm still awaiting a modern-day rematch with Rosie O'Donnell and Elisabeth Hasselbeck. Now that would be one "Survivor" episode worth viewing.)

A quarter of a century ago, OJ was still running for rental cars, not from rent-a-cops. We held Michael Jackson in awe, instead of "ew..." Ozzy was the only Osbourne. Rod Stewart and Woody Allen had relationships with women old enough to know better, and we still believed Princess Diana had married Prince Charming.

In retrospect, life was pretty innocent back then. Yet, there was an inkling of things to come as 1983 marked the year that Karen Carpenter's death introduced anorexia and a French scientist discovered HIV.

Technology — Today I watch TV on my computer, take pictures with my camera, surf the Web from my phone and download music from the Internet. But it wasn't until 1983 that Microsoft Word was first distributed, compact discs were released and Motorola introduced mobile phones to the public. Back then, a blackberry was just a fruit; a blue tooth would mean a call to the dentist; and the most sought after holiday present was not a video game, but a Cabbage Patch Kid that didn't even have a second life as an avatar in an online community.

That was all soon to change as 1983 was the year that ARPANET began using the Internet Protocol, helping create the Internet.

Politics/Legal — In 1983, the Reagan administration was focused on the Soviets, "Star Wars" and "just saying no." Congress came together to create Martin Luther King Day and Jesse Jackson announced his intention to run for president. Universal and Sony were duking it out in the Supreme Court over the videotaping of television broadcasts. (If they only knew what that little known Internet thingy would have in store for them.)

Women's rights were at a high point in 1983. Sally Ride ventured into space and just two years after appointing the first female justice, the Supreme Court limited the power of state and local governments to restrict access to legal abortions and ruled that employers must treat male and females equally in providing health benefits. It's no surprise that only a year later presidential candidate Walter Mondale selected Geraldine Ferraro as a running mate.

1983 was also a year where we actually witnessed wars coming to a close as the US withdrew from Grenada and 125 million of us tuned in for the final episode of "M*A*S*H."

Retrospective wrap-up — Looking back, I was fortunate to grow up in an era of relative innocence, innovation, opportunity and optimism. Although I must confess that it might have made me a bit naive. You see, in 1983, I was living in Maryland and rooting for the Washington Redskins as they won the Super Bowl and the Baltimore Orioles who later that year won the World Series. I thought hometown-winning streaks went on forever.

Diane K. Danielson is a Cohasset resident who hopes that her son learns as she did that even when the winning streaks come to an end and society seems to be moving in the wrong direction, it can be just as rewarding to root for underdogs, long-shots, explorers and dreamers who upset the status quo and shake up the world as we know it.

Affordable housing is our focus

COMMENTARY

TOM CALLAHAN & CLARK BREWER

We have pursued a broad, all-encompassing strategy including looking for small projects that do not have substantial impact on a given area

The Cohasset Housing Partnership would like to take this opportunity to explain its request to the Selectmen last Monday to do percolation tests on town-owned land off Smith Place and Pleasant Lane.

The CHP is charged with developing affordable housing options in the town, both to respond to the requirements of MGL c. 40B and to provide housing affordable to town employees, seniors on limited incomes wishing to downsize and our young people seeking to start out in the town they grew up in. We take this responsibility very seriously. Affordable housing, starter housing and downsizing housing are increasingly rare in Cohasset. It is well known that we are far behind the 40B requirement of 10 percent of total housing stock being affordable. Avalon, even if built all at once, does not get us to 10 percent. We will need other small projects.

We have pursued a broad, all-encompassing strategy including looking for small projects that do not have substantial impact on a given area. We are in the process of working with a local developer to convert two units of existing town-owned housing and are entertaining a proposal for four new rental units. We supported the village bylaw and will look for other sensible zoning and development options, which provide housing opportunities, and we are working with the private development community.

We believe that, after the upcoming 2010 census (assuming the construction of Avalon and other projects in the pipeline), Cohasset would still need perhaps up to 30 units, perhaps less, perhaps a little more, in order for the town to keep pace with its housing needs. The land in question may be an option for some of these, but this idea is in a very early stage. With thoughtful projects and a good inclusionary zoning bylaw, the town can achieve and maintain the 10 percent threshold, and address a very real market need. That is our optimistic goal.

In this marketplace, affordable housing requires subsidies. State subsidy money is hard if not impossible to come by at present. Towns can subsidize the process by use of town land, eliminating a substantial cost.

We understand the competing desire to preserve open space. Affordable housing competes with many other interests, but is a necessity and, we believe, a priority. To do nothing, and face the alternative is unthinkable. The lack of affordable options in Cohasset is readily apparent to anyone in the position to be looking for them. To date, through surveys and interaction with the Selectmen, we have had what we believe is strong support for our efforts and our approach. We hope that support will continue. We also ask that if anyone has any questions of our efforts please feel free to ask us, or attend one of the CHP monthly public meetings.

And a dirty word was born

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

You guys all know what the N-word means so I won't have to risk getting yelled at by the Rev. Al Sharpton by explaining it to you.

What I want to talk about is the L-word, or, rather, the LY-word, since the L-word seems to have been commandeered by Showtime for its late night drama about women who prefer other women to men.

In case you haven't heard, a Golf Channel anchorwoman named Kelly Tilghman last week was asked on air what a promising young golfer has to do to get past Tiger Woods and reach the pinnacle of his sport.

"Lynch him in a back alley," she cracked and another dirty word was born.

No one questions that the LY-wording of so many African Americans back in the days when they were known as N-words was a dastardly act that gave murder a bad name. But to stigmatize a whole word?

"There is simply no place on our network for offensive language like this," said a statement from the Golf Channel, which promptly suspended Kelly for two weeks. The Rev. Al, of course, demanded that she be fired.

About the only person who was not excited by Kelly's use of the LY-word was Tiger Woods, whose agent, Mark Steinberg, quoted him as calling it a non-issue. The Tiger, incidentally, is more Thai than African American by extraction.

The LY-word apparently first appeared in the late 18th century, the legacy of a Colonel Charles Lynch of Virginia, a Revolutionary soldier with a predilection for stringing up miscreants of any race after a trial of doubtful legality.

As far as I can tell, the first such word to be banned from the vocabulary of the market place is the F-word, although it has been staging a remarkable comeback recently on late night cable TV. In fact, a whole book has been devoted to it.

For you guys who don't know what I'm talking about, I recommend Cinemax or HBO anytime after midnight as a good place to start your education.

The most recent addition to the secular version of the Index is the H-word, made famous by the radio shock jock Don Imus in his description of the Rutgers ladies' basketball team and by Santa Claus as he dropped down the chimney.

And don't forget the C-word, as in Merry C-word, the creation of the ACLU in its bid to level the playing field for all in a sterilized America.

It's getting so you have to tiptoe around each sentence and paragraph to see if it contains any word that might possibly offend someone and call attention to yourself from the Revs. Al and Jesse and the ACLU.

When I was a young reporter and ice covered most of the earth, women were never "raped," they were "criminally assaulted," as if that made them feel any better about it.

I asked Frank Hart, my first editor at the Associated Press, what kind of an assault is not criminal?

"Shut up and write it," he said.

Now that we have an LY-word, can an R-word be far behind?

Sustainable Cohasset to meet with AEC

Several members of the Alternative Energy Committee will meet with members of Sustainable Cohasset at 7:30 p.m., on Tuesday, Jan. 22, in the Bartow Room at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church on Highland Avenue. They will discuss the proposed upcoming Wind Zoning Bylaw to be voted on at spring Town Meeting. They will also be seeking support for the Green Start program as well, which is a state-sponsored public initiative to fund clean energy and secure grant monies for the communities involved. Presently Cohasset has only 30 families participating. The AEC would like to see those numbers increase to 150 to secure matching funds for Alternative Energy projects.

After the AEC presentation, the four-star movie, a "Crude Awakening," will be previewed and followed by discussion. Food and beverage will be served.

Slanetz pulls papers for School Committee

School Committee incumbent Alfred Slanetz and current Town Clerk Marion Douglas were the only citizens to pull papers this past week.

Only one race for a seat is apparent so far, four candidates have pulled papers to run for Library Trustee and there are only three three-year positions available. George Haley of 119 Pleasant Street and Mary Lou Lawrence of 15 Beach Street will vie for a seat with incumbents Rodney Hobson of 31 Deep Run and Sheila Evans of 72 North Main Street. Citizens are not considered candidates until they return their papers with the required signatures.

Three-term Selectman Fred Koed pulled papers to run for re-election. Robin Lawrence, a sitting Board of Health member, and Mary Granville, a current member of the Board of Assessors, pulled papers to retain their seats.

The last day to take out nomination papers is Thursday, February 14. In order to hold a position you must be registered voter of the town.

Positions available for the 2008 town election include: Selectmen — two for three-year positions; Moderator — one three-year position; Town Clerk - one three-years position; School Committee — one three-year position; Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three three-year positions; Assessor—one three-year position; Board of Health — one three-year position; Planning Board — one for five-year position and one three-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Recreation Commission - one five-year position and one two-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Sewer Commission- one three-year position; and Water Commission — one three-year position.

BRIEFLY

Absentee ballots for Presidential Primary

Absentee ballots for the Presidential Primary on Feb. 5 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon, on Monday, Feb. 4, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. People who will be in town on Election Day and are able to come to the polls should vote in person. Residents may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Green-Rainbow, or Working Families, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. If a voter is Un-enrolled (Independent) he/she needs to choose a ballot and will remain Un-enrolled after the primary.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Feb. 5 to be counted.

Residents who are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast a vote at the polling place, may file a letter from a physician with the Town Clerk, stating that they are permanently unable to cast their vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for the resident to sign and return will be mailed to them by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Con. Comm. needs associate member

A new member joined the ranks of the Conservation Commission. Doug Wilson of 20 Nichols Road was appointed to the Commission at Monday night's Board of Selectmen meeting. Wilson has served as an associate member, a non-voting position, for over one year. While serving as an associate member he got to know the duties, policies and issues the Commission is involved in.

"It's great that you want to serve," said Selectmen Fred Koed. Alix White recently resigned from her position on the Commission.

The Conservation Commission is now seeking an associate member. Being an associate member allows the person to train and see how things work, eventually moving to a full member, said Chairman David Farrag. The associate member can take part in the discussions, but ultimately do not vote.

Cohasset Sports Partnership to focus on athletic fundraising

"We believe that the Partnership can make a very positive difference in the lives of Cohasset students today."
— George McGoldrick, Cohasset Sports Partnership

A group of Cohasset residents have formed the Cohasset Sports Partnership, a private nonprofit organization dedicated to enhancing the athletic facilities and programs offered to students and residents. Cohasset Sports Partnership has as its mission to compliment school and town recreation by offering high quality athletic facilities, programs and benefits to the residents and students of Cohasset. The focus will be to develop resources beyond those traditionally used to support local public athletic programs and apply them to projects and programs that might otherwise not exist.

CSP has been recognized and accepted as an affiliate of the Clark Chatterton Memorial Fund. The Chatterton Fund, a private nonprofit organization dedicated to the memory of Clark Chatterton, has had a similar focus since its inception eight years ago. The Chatterton Fund has successfully raised more than $100,000 and donated the proceeds to various athletic and town wide initiatives.

CSP will be focusing on major projects such as combined fundraising for the school booster clubs, a prospective synthetic turf field for the Middle/High School and additional athletic programs for the Middle/High School.

The mission of the CSP is to act as a community based, nonprofit organization committed to Cohasset's tradition of valuing athletics as a key component to the education of students. Combing high-quality education and well-funded athletic programs ensures the best overall experience for the children in the community. With recent fiscal constraints reducing after school athletic programs, the lack of available field space for practices and games, and the proliferation of newer programs such as lacrosse and field hockey, the demands for resources are stretched too thin. Newly elected CSP president George McGoldrick said the partnership believes the town and schools are correct in focusing on academics in the schools, but at the same time believes that providing excellent athletic facilities and programs compliments the education process.

"We believe that the Partnership can make a very positive difference in the lives of Cohasset students today," McGoldrick said. "No matter how well or poorly the athletic programs at public schools are funded, a private foundation is necessary to address the challenges of maintaining and enhancing athletic excellence in today's competitive climate.

"We are fortunate in Cohasset to have a dedicated base of parents and citizens that want to see our students prevail not only in the classrooms but on the playing fields."

As proof of the town's athletic prowess Cohasset was recently awarded the Boston Globe Scholastic Larry Ames Award two years in a row. The Ames Award is bestowed on those schools that exhibit the highest winning percentage in all varsity sports. It's a testament to the town, schools and parents that the academic level of the schools remains in the top 5 percent in the state and the athletic programs are also recognized for their triumphs. The CSP will endeavor to support the athletic programs to ensure their continued success.

The CSP board includes vice president Bill Cavanaro, treasurer Suellen Durkin and secretary Lorraine Tarpey. Another 12 town residents make up the balance of the board. The diverse group includes parents, former players and concerned residents.

Recently the CSP introduced itself to the Selectmen. Following up on an informational meeting by the School Committee in November regarding the condition of Alumni Field, the CSP requested a liaison from the Selectmen for the committee the CSP is forming with the School Committee and Recreation Department. The committee will investigate the feasibility of a synthetic turf field at Alumni and the resources available to fund a project.

Anyone interesting in learning more about CSP or in becoming involved, call Ellen Maher at 781-383-9513.

Team Psycho partners with the Cohasset Triathlon

"We are thrilled to have Team Psycho and its high caliber athletes participate in our event."
— Bill Burnett, race director

The Cohasset Triathlon Association announces a partnership with Team Psycho Triathlete, an elite Greater Boston based triathlon team. Under the newly formed partnership, Team Psycho will sponsor an elite prize purse out of its Elite Development Program. Prizes of $250, $150, and $100 will be handed out to each of the top three Elite finishers in both male and female waves.

Four Team Psycho Elite Development Program athletes will compete in the Cohasset Triathlon including Jarrod Shoemaker, 2005 U23 National Champion and U.S. team member at the 2008 Beijing Olympics; Dede Griesbauer, Top American Woman and seventh overall at the 2007 Ironman World Championships in Kona, Hawaii; Karen Smyers, 1995 Ironman World Champion and six time U.S. Pro National Champion; and 2007 U23 National Champion Ethan Brown.

Founder and Race Director of the Cohasset Triathlon, Bill Burnett, said of the partnership, "We are thrilled to have Team Psycho and its high caliber athletes participate in our event."

The intent of the Team Psycho Elite Development Program is to provide financial and mentoring support for younger athletes dedicated to reaching the highest goals with the sport: namely the ITU World Championships and the Olympics. Team Psycho regularly sponsors a few select local races that will create buzz within the local community and encourage the best athletes to attend these races and potentially serve as candidates for the Team Psycho Elite Development Program.

Scott Shaunessy, Team Psycho board member, said "We want to give back to the sport and assist local race directors who have served the triathlon community by helping to promote first-rate events with elite fields. We feel that the Cohasset Triathlon is a great match for our team."

According to Burnett, the race field is completely sold out as of this past Saturday with 700 athletes registered. "The overwhelming response to our race is a fantastic tribute the success of our race," says Burnett, "we have plans to make the race experience even better this year."

Over one-quarter of the participants, 182 athletes, hail from Cohasset, said Burnett.

The Cohasset Triathlon consists of a .25-mile ocean swim, followed by a 12.5-mile bike course and a 3.2-mile run. The date of the race is Sunday, June 29. Start time is 8 a.m.

For more information about the race, visit www.cohassettri.com. Online race registration is available through Active.com.

Deep Run work nears completion

Status Report: Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue Sewer and Water Projects

SEWER REPORT

JOHN BECK

This is one in a continuing series of status reports on the Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue sewer and water projects.

The contractor continues to make progress on all fronts. There are now four main line crews simultaneously deployed in three different areas: Nichols Road, Deep Run/Rust Way and Whitehead Road. It is anticipated that sewer work on Deep Run will be finished later this week or early the week of the 21st,21st, as will all water work on Deep Run. Rust Way mainline sewer will almost be complete in about another week with service stubs immediately following. The mainline crew on Rust Way will next be deployed for work extending the sewer main line on Jerusalem Road to the intersection with Atlantic Avenue and parts of Jerusalem Road Lane. After Whitehead is complete, the contractor will also be moving onto Atlantic Avenue for sewer construction. The sewer work on Whitehead Lane will continue, as will the efforts on Nichols Road. Work on the adjoining side roads and lanes off of Nichols Road will be potentially delayed for warmer weather when a water by-pass system can be installed to ensure continuous water service during construction.

As the sewer work nears a particular residence, the homeowner will be asked about a week or two in advance of the construction to confirm the desired location of the sewer service stub off the collector pipe in the street. It is very important that each property owner know the most desirable location for their stub, as the cost of moving the stub later will be the responsibility of the homeowner. Each homeowner should work with their chosen contractor to select the best location for the stub. Confirmations should be returned to the construction inspector or dropped off at the Engineer"s trailer on Jerusalem Road within one week of notification to ensure that service layout is done in accordance with residents" wishes.

Each homeowner should work with their chosen contractor to select the best location for the stub.

The ZBA has indicated that their its deliberations regarding the appeal of the location of the staging area will continue at their its next scheduled meeting in February.

As winter weather sets in, most asphalt plants have closed down for the winter, so trench repaving will be intermittent and many trench surfaces will remain unpaved until conditions are suitable for paving. The contractor is responsible for maintaining a drivable surface and for snow removal on impacted streets. In inclement weather, the trench surface can settle or become rutted by vehicular traffic very quickly. Although the contractor and the engineer canvas the area periodically for such conditions, the speed at which the road can degrade is highly variable. Any resident noticing significant settlement or rutting of the trench should contact the resident engineer, Kevin McRae (see below) so that the contractor can be made aware and address the issue. We realize that construction activity can be annoying and traffic navigation aggravating, especially during winter months, but we all need to anticipate the final goals and benefits of the project to our properties and the environment. We are working in winter to help expedite the project and reduce the overall construction period. The estimated completion date is August 15, 2009 (less than two years away).

For those interested, the overall schedule (downloadable PDF format) for the water and sewer projects will soon be added to the Sewer Commission web page on the Town of Cohasset"s web site at:

http://www.townofcohasset.org/sewer/documents.html

Contacts:

Questions about any aspect of the work should be addressed to Mr. Kevin McRae, the resident engineer for the Town"s contractor, Coughlin Environmental Services LLC (CES). His office is located in the construction trailer in the staging area off Jerusalem Road. The telephone number for the trailer, which will be staffed during normal working hours, is 781-383-2900. Mr. McRae"s cell phone number is 617-592-3276.

Questions about the updates:

Any questions about the updates may be sent to the author, John Beck, at johnbeckiii@msn.com.

designed to reduce diesel emissions. One California bus operator, in addition to upgrading its fleet, agreed to post notices in its buses warning of the cancer risk from diesel fumes. (California listed diesel exhaust as a carcinogen in 1990). The California settlement agreement will reduce diesel emissions in one bus fleet by more than 85 percent.

Where else? We in the Board have a thing about the effect of trace contaminants – in our water – in the air – on the surfaces that we touch. It isn't as if we're clean freaks, but it's always good to be aware. So, one of the things we are considering is to develop a system whereby we can identify hot spots of unhealthy conditions. An example is uncovered dumpsters where rodents are likely to gather. But other, subtler factors may merit investigation; for example would it be possible to map the sites where levels of diesel fumes are highest? – using instrumentation already available, simple and easy to use. What about, for example – areas near the train tracks, or where parking buses are idling? Maybe, we'll see.

Charles fuels road win

Junior nets 27 in comeback; Martin gets triple-double

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Cohasset pulled away in overtime thanks to good play by Robert Jones, who opened the extra period with a steal and an assist to Charles.

Through all the chaos that was Wednesday night's game at South Shore Vocational Technical, Cohasset guard Marcus Charles kept his head. The junior guard got things done on both ends of the court, utilizing his quick hands on defense and finishing strong on offense.

All tolled, Charles 27 points, 21 in the second half, proved enough for the Skippers to win, 66-60, in overtime against the Vikings.

"Marcus stepped up for us very nicely," said Cohasset coach Dorian Bryant. "He was struggling a little bit so it was nice to see him comeback in a really tough game and get after it. He had some really big shots for us down the stretch."

That "stretch" seemed to last forever, as both teams fought back and forth during a very chippy second half. Cohasset (5-5 overall, 1-4 in the South Shore League) led, 26-23, at halftime, and every time the Skippers extended their lead in the second half, South Shore came back.

Early in the third quarter, senior Patrick McCarthy was hit with a technical foul after getting tangled up with a Vikings player. Both teams jawed back and forth, and that jawing reached the stands. Eventually the game was stopped for ten minutes, a fan in attendance was asked to leave the game, and both teams headed to the locker room to cool off.

"We did," Bryant said, when asked if his team lost its composure in the third quarter. "We really lost our composure for a second, we had the technical called on us, there was stuff going on in the crowd that I had no idea was going on, so we just huddled up and said 'there are more things at stake than just this.'"

Cohasset shot 4-of-13 in the third quarter, and trailed, 40-37, after a Jeff Tripp three-point shot ended the frame.

The Skippers turned things around in the fourth.

Cohasset took a, 41-40, lead on back-to-back Danny Martin (16 points, 14 blocks, 12 rebounds) baskets. A Charles steal and lay in gave the Skippers a, 43-40, lead. Cohasset would extend the lead to, 52-44, on a Martin put back midway through the fourth quarter.

Bryant was impressed with how his kids handled the adversity of the third quarter.

"Our kids stayed level headed and actually fought their way through it," he said.

Cohasset didn't execute down the stretch and Jay Sullivan led the Vikings back with a nice array of offensive moves. SSVT tied the game, 55-55, where it would go to overtime.

"Sullivan is a heck of a player, he has really improved this year," Bryant said about the Vikings shooting guard who is averaging over 20 points a game this season.

Cohasset pulled away in overtime thanks to good play by Robert Jones, who opened the extra period with a steal and an assist to Charles. A Martin block led to another Charles basket, and an ensuing pair of free throws by Charles gave Cohasset a, 64-57, lead they wouldn't give up.

"That was a gutty performance by our kids," Bryant said. "We really needed a win."

Cohasset Hockey Notebook

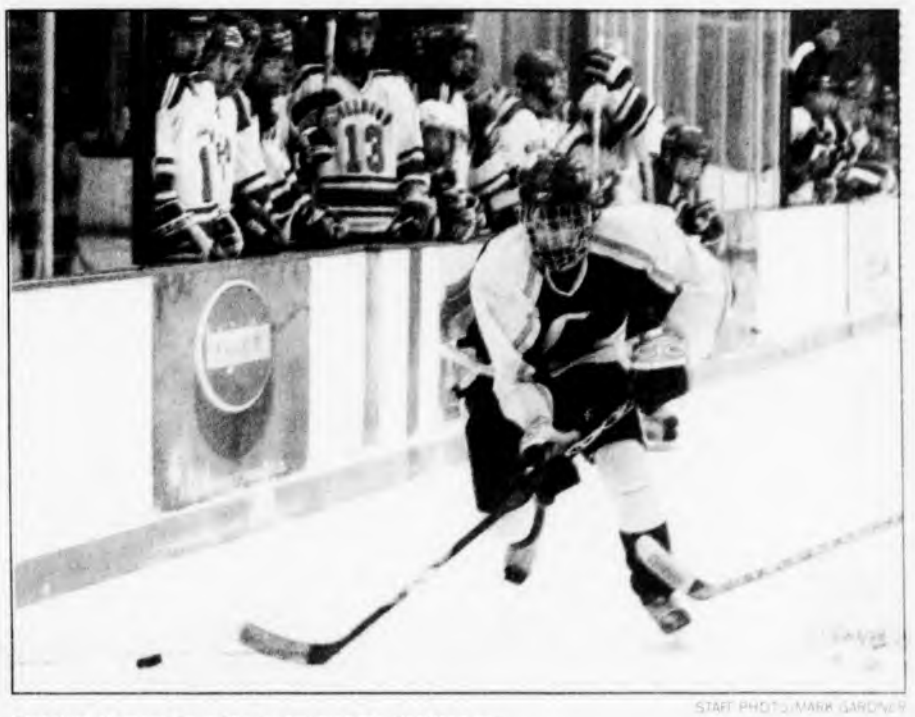
Mashpee game notes, Wednesday, January 16

In another strong night of hockey, the Skippers defeated the Hawks, 5-2, thanks to another hat trick by Pat Doonan. He also added an assist in the game. Czerkawski was a playmaker dishing out three assists and scoring one goal. Alex Goetz scored shorthanded.

"The Chaz, Doonan line were terrific," said Cohasset coach Bob Walsh. "They skated hard."

Jonny Wade had another top performance, despite injuring his collar bone.

"He was hit during warm-ups and thought he would be out for the night but was cleared to play," Walsh said. "He turned in a great performance."



Cohasset started out sluggish and trailed 1-0 after one period. They turned things around scoring four goals in the second period. Cohasset out-shot Mashpee, 33-27, in the game. The Skippers improved to 5-3-2 overall, 4-1 in the South Shore League with the win.

Old Rochester game notes, Friday, January 11

Despite Pat Doonan's hat trick in the first period, Cohasset couldn't hold off Old Rochester's star Brennan Goguen who scored two of his own and assisted on one to tie Cohasset, 3-3.

"We knew that Goguen was OR's top player going into tonight's game," said Cohasset coach Bob Walsh. "We did a terrible job of keeping him in check both from a coaching standpoint and a players' standpoint. It isn't

Skippers on a roll

Girls win fifth straight against Mashpee

"Our goal has been to keep on improving."
John LeVangie

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Young and talented, the Cohasset High girls basketball team is having quite the first half of the season marching out to a 7-2 overall record, 6-1 in the South Shore League. The Skippers are winners of five straight, most recently defeating Hull, Norwell and Mashpee—three league opponents.

Playing one of the toughest schedules in Division 4, Cohasset should benefit from the good competition come tournament time. The Skippers have already played Sacred Heart, Hull and West Bridgewater, a few of Div. 4's better teams. Not to mention they face Div. 3 teams night in and night out in the SSL.

"We are holding our own," said Cohasset coach John LeVangie. "I'm pleased at this point, they are working really hard."

LeVangie is admittedly surprised his team is in the mix with Abington and Hull atop the league, but he understands this talented group is progressing at a fast rate.

The girls most recently defeated Mashpee on the road, 54-39, Tuesday night. Sammi Lehr led with 16 points followed by sister Tori who had 11, Kayla Farren (10 points), Meredith Kelly (8) and Carli Haggerty (7). Haggerty also added five rebounds and three blocks in the game.

Cohasset can go deep into its bench this season, with Haggerty, Lindsay Davis and Samantha Crough. According to LeVangie "it's like having eight starters."

Both Sammi and Tori Lehr have been providing consistent post defense along with forward Meredith Kelly. Carly Salerno provides the Skippers with an outside shooting threat while Farren has been consistent at the point.

"She has improved a lot since last year," LeVangie said about Farren. "It has made us a stronger team."

Izzy Franklin and Rachel Fredey are also improving as the season progresses.

"Both are playing more and doing a really good job," LeVangie added.

LeVangie hopes the girls can keep the pace as the season's second half approaches.

"Our goal has been to keep on improving," LeVangie said. "It has worked so far—we'll see if we can keep it up."

Norwell game notes

Cohasset defeated Norwell, 41-33, Friday night. Kelly led the team with 15 points, followed by Tori Lehr's 14. Sammi Lehr grabbed 11 rebounds in the win. Cohasset led 14-8 after one quarter, 20-11, at the halt.

"Neither team really got it going offensively," LeVangie said.

Hull game notes

The Hull game from Tuesday, January 8, was one of the most exciting games of the year for Cohasset. The only time the Skippers led was when Kelly nailed the second of two free throws with one-second left to give the visitors a, 44-43, win.

Cohasset trailed, 27-17, at the half.

"It's always tough to play down at Hull," LeVangie said. "It was a very aggressive game, it made a difference when their key players fouled out."

Cohasset trailed by has many as 10 points with five minutes to play in the game, and cut the lead to eight with 2:30 remaining. Davis eventually tied the game, 43-43, with an outside jump shot, setting up Kelley's game winning free throw. Salerno played a vital role in the late comeback nailing a pair of outside shots, including a three-pointer.

often that you get an opportunity to key one guy and win a game.

"We did a good job on him (Goguen), defensively, in the first period and Chaz, Pat and Paul took care of the offense."

Senior Chaz Czerkawski made three perfect passes to Doonan who found the net on all three. The first goal came at 2:26 of the first period. The second tally came at 5:45 of the first, and the third at 7:49 of the first period.

"The last goal was textbook," Walsh said. "Paul Pozniak moved low and passed the puck to Chaz and Chaz found Pat right out in front of the net for a one timer."

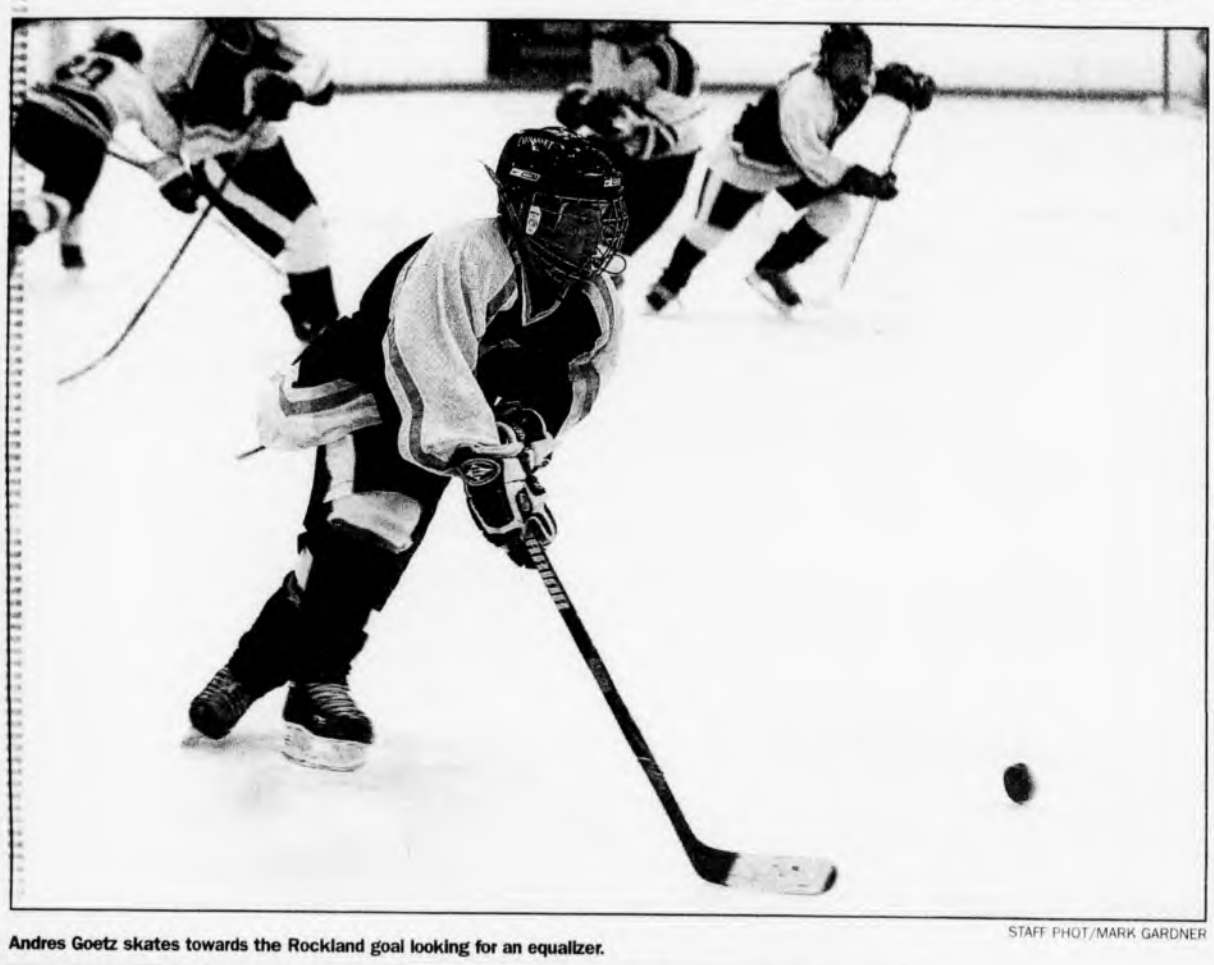
In the second period, Goguen found his way through to set up Jon Hartley for their first goal at 8:05 of the second and then, with only 39 seconds left in the period, Goguen broke in and scored unassisted carrying the momentum into the locker room.

The third period was back and fourth until 12:16 of the period when Goguen managed to score again, this time assisted by Gage Silva.

Hull game notes, Saturday, January 12

This game saw some new faces in the crowd. With RK Quebec, Eric Bartucca and Brendan Doonan out and Andy McKenna, a healthy scratch for the night, Vinny Curran, Harry Cipolla, Jack Nelson and Andrew Whitney were called into service for the Hull game.

Harry Cipolla logged his first varsity point of the season with an assist on a goal by Ian Lyster who's shot from the point found its way in through traffic to get the Skippers on the board late in the first period.



The second period was much the same with the Skippers starting out slow once again. But for a second night, the line of Czerkawski, Doonan and Pozniak clicked in with a goal. This time with Czerkawski finishing out in front assisted by Doonan and Pozniak. Cohasset led 2-0 after two periods of action.

"I went into the locker room with an uncomfortable feeling," Walsh said. "We were up by two goals but we weren't playing our game and Hull got some good opportunities against us that had Jonny Wade earning his paycheck once again.

"I simply went in and reminded the boys that this was a divisional game and we needed to be playing a much better game if we were to beat Hull. As I left the locker room, I was comfortable that we were either going to rise to the occasion or fall flat on our faces."

5:15 into the third, Chaz scored assisted by Pat Doonan and Conor Queenan. At 11:33, during a line change that put Anders Goetz on the ice with Pat Doonan, they combined to give Pat his fourth goal in two days. Then, with .06 seconds on the clock, Pat Doonan scored on an empty net to give the Skippers a 5-0 win.

All-Scholastic field hockey team

Meehan, Kimla and Strecker among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top public school girls field hockey athletes for this honor.

This is the Community Newspaper Company girls field hockey *squad comprised of athletes from Taunton, Lakeville, Raynham, Randolph, Avon, Hanson, Whitman, Hanover, Marshfield, Weymouth, Braintree, Plymouth, Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, Abington, Rockland, Halifax, Plympton, Easton, Pembroke, Kingston, Carver, Cohasset, Duxbury, Norton and Mansfield. Mass Shape Up is helping to fulfill New Year's resolutions

The fourth annual health and fitness competition kicks off

The Massachusetts Amateur Sports Foundation (MASF), best known for the Bay State Games, is pleased to announce the fourth year of the Mass Shape Up program, presented by The Savings Bank Life Insurance Company of Massachusetts (SBLI). Mass Shape Up is a health and fitness initiative for Massachusetts residents. This four month competition enables individuals to assess their daily routine and find a healthier way to live. The aim of the program is to help participants stay on track to reaching their personal health and fitness goals.

As it has for the past three years, the competition consists of teams of 2-10 people made up of co-workers, family members, or friends who are dedicated to health and wellness. Each team selects a captain who will be responsible for making sure all team members report their monthly progress, as well as distribute weekly tips and monthly newsletters from health and fitness experts from across the state. Teams compete against other Massachusetts residents in the following divisions: Weight loss (due to a healthy and appropriate diet), accumulated activity minutes or a combination of both. Improvements to the program for 2008 include: A new resource section with access to recipes, health links, exercise links, event lists, calorie counters, log charts and more; the ability to customize health news to specific areas of interest; and new resources and incentives to report weight loss and activity minutes.

Participants of the 2007 Mass Shape Up program reported more than 3,700 pounds in weight loss and accumulated more than 3.6 million activity minutes. The competition continues to be a hit with organizations and business. So far, those committed to the program include private businesses including Sasaki Associates, Network Health (Medford, MA) and R.M. Nietupski Roll Off Service (Belchertown, MA), the departments of corrections in Hampden County and Shirley, school districts including Hopkinton, and city employees from Ashland and North Hampton.

The competition officially begins Tuesday, January 15, but registration will remain open for a short period to help accommodate late entries. Mass Shape Up will conclude Thursday, May 15.

For more information regarding Mass Shape Up including a list of all participating teams and to register, please visit www.massshapeup.org or call the Bay State Games' office (781) 932-6555.

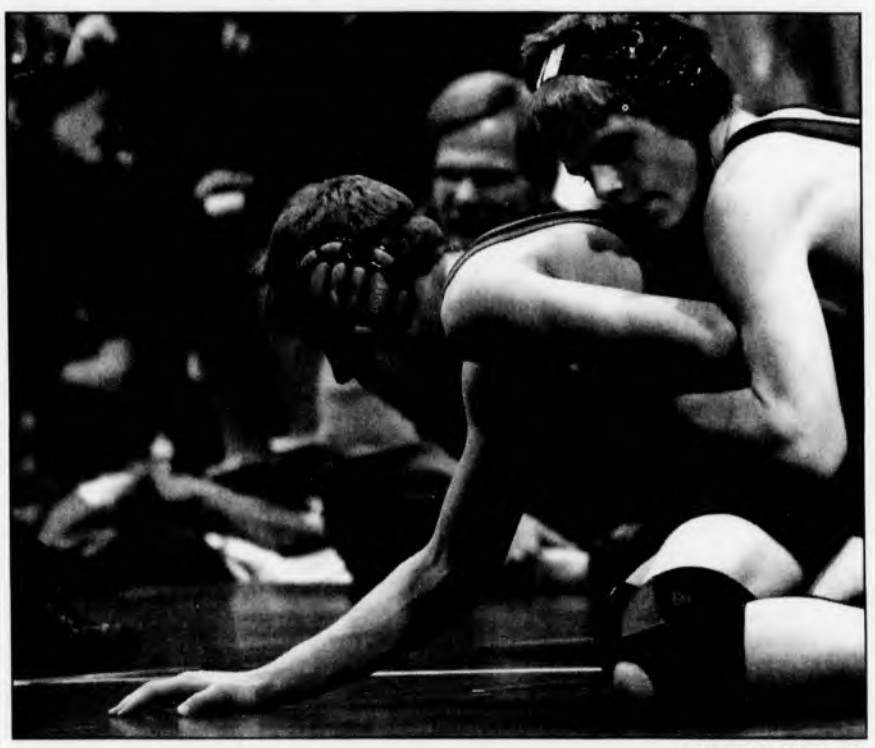
Youth clinic a success

The Cohasset High School Hockey team with the generous help of Cohasset resident and hockey parent Paul McHugh conducted a youth clinic, Sunday night, Jan 13.

The McHugh's kindly donated the use of their private rink for the event that featured Cohasset coach Bob Walsh, assistant coach Bobby Walsh, and a number of the CHS varsity hockey players.

Captains Charlie Czerkawski, Frank Wheelwright, Pat Doonan and Alex Goetz along with Junior Ian Lyster and Sophomore Conor Queenan worked on skating and hockey drills with over twenty Mites and Squirt youth players from the Coastal Stars Youth Hockey Program.



"This was a great time for the kids and a perfect way to reach out and create awareness at the youth level," said Steve Brandt of the CHS Hockey Boosters. "Its important for all young Cohasset Hockey players and their parents to know that CHS has a first class coach and a first class program."

This year CHS Hockey introduced a Junior Varsity program to help develop younger players and build a strong competitive program. After Wednesday night's action, CHS is 5-3-2 at the midpoint of its season.

Finally, the long awaited Snow Day!

LIFE AT CHS

CHRISTINE KENT

Nothing sounds sweeter than an automated voice recording informing you that school has been cancelled due to…who listens past "cancelled?" Yes, Monday's snowstorm was certainly an awesome gift from Mother Nature, especially for stressed out students and teachers alike, who need a time out from the chaos of the ever-encroaching end of term. This time, the end of term marks the beginning of a new semester, which means new classes for all!

Maybe this fresh start will temporarily stop the fast paced spreading of "Senioritis". So far there has been no discovered cure for the epidemic, characterized by severe cases of daydreaming or "laziness" within the ranks of grade twelve students. Don't worry teachers, it's not you it's us.

So, on that note, it's time to jump into the top stories of the week!

- Monday, Jan. 14: The snow day that kids had been hoping for since…September!
- Tuesday, Jan. 15: The Middle School Intramurals!
- Wednesday, Jan. 16: The Varsity Hockey Team faced off against Mashpee. The 7th-grade traveling basketball team met in the gym.
- Thursday, Jan. 16: The Harlem Rockets visit CHS in an always-entertaining display of talent as they shoot hoops against the Cohasset Dream Team!
- Friday, Jan. 17: Not to be forgotten, the girls JV and Varsity Basketball teams throw it down against East Bridgewater.

Well, that's it for me this week. Have an awesome weekend everyone.

Quebec's 400th Birthday Bash

Barbara Radcliffe Rogers
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Quebec City is turning 400, and everyone is invited to what promises to be a major 10-month celebration.

The city on the St. Lawrence has been sprucing itself up for the 400th celebration, even adding attractions including a new 1.5-mile riverside park, Promenade Samuel de Champlain, named for Quebec's founder. Expect the whole city to be bigger, better, flashier and brighter.

The charming city's legendary bonhommerie (good natured-ness) will of course be well on display. And this includes at Quebec's annual Winter Carnival, great fun every year, but really expected to outdo itself when it gets under way next month (Feb. 1 to 17).

As the first major festival of the city's 400th year, the winter celebration will feature a gala one-hour parade the nights of Feb. 9 and 16 - all new, with new floats and characters, original music and multimedia projections on buildings along parade route. Bundle up and be part of the admiring crowd.

But Winter Carnival is a lot more than a parade. It's a big outdoor party.

Snow sculptures line a boulevard across the Plains of Abraham (the historic battlefield park), which becomes a giant winter playground with tubing, games and snow castles for kids and live entertainment, dog sledding and sleigh rides for everyone. Elsewhere, crowds will cheer a canoe race across the half-frozen St. Lawrence, where teams alternately paddle through the water and push the huge canoes over the tilting ice flows.

More adventure awaits just outside the city at Duchesnay, where a new hotel is built each year, completely of ice. Guests can enjoy evening drinks at an ice bar before retiring to comforter-heaped beds carved of ice, each in a designer room with ice walls, floor and ceiling.

While all of this involves cold-weather fun, it's just the beginning of the $80 million-plus 400th celebration, which is on until October. While Quebec serves up all its usual pleasures - including an endearing Old World charm - there is much special for the anniversary period.

Nearly every place in Quebec is involved with history, culture and food.

Restaurants are boasting original 400th menus and dishes, museums have special exhibits, even the Quebec Symphony gets into the act with 1,000 musicians performing Mahler's 8th Symphony on March 18.

The Ice Castle is a popular attraction at Winter Carnival.

Other festival highlights are:

Espace 400 (June 3 to Oct. 19) Welcome center for the summer 400th festivities is this exhibition and gathering space at Bassin Louise, in the Old Port. Visitors are invited to take a suitcase and follow an immigrant's travels, perhaps one of the 500,000 Irish who arrived in Quebec before moving to New England and elsewhere. Here, too, will be daily entertainment, contemporary designer gardens and the multimedia Image Mill, billed as the largest outdoor projection ever made - a 40-minute show highlighting the city's history will be projected nightly (June 20 to July 29) on an enormous wall of grain elevators across the river.

Happy Birthday, Quebec City! (July 3 to 5) Beginning with a Solemn Mass at the cathedral, July 3, the exact date of Samuel de Champlain's landing in 1608, the party includes a military parade, a spectacular opening show on the Plains of Abraham and a torch-lit parade. An urban opera on July 5, will use city landscape as backdrop for a musical/visual work recounting Quebec's 400 years and featuring more than 1,000 entertainers.

The Louvre in Quebec (June 5 to Oct. 26) The Musee National des Beaux-arts du Quebec (www.mnba.qc.ca) will host an exhibit of more than 250 artworks from the Louvre. These works - from the Oriental, Egyptian, Greek, Etruscan and Roman Antiquities collections - rarely leave Paris.

The Walking Road (Aug. 15) The full moon will light the St. Lawrence River, which becomes the stage for this all-night extravaganza of acrobatics, dance and projections.

Celine Dion on the Plains of Abraham (Aug. 22) Quebec singing idol Celine Dion will perform with several other artists in a free public concert. For information on seating, visit www.myQuebec2008.com, after April 15.

Cirque du Soleil (Oct. 19) The grand finale of the 400th anniversary activities is an original show by performers gathered from Cirque du Soleil's troupes throughout the French-speaking world.

Mad River Glen - same as it ever was

Tim Jones
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

IN NEW ENGLAND

Mad River Glen in Fayston, Vt., hasn't changed much since 1947, when it was started by a bunch of disgruntled traditionalists who thought the skiing at Stowe had become too commercial. (Wonder what they would think today?)

The place is a time machine to the past, owned by a group of 1,905 who, with good reason, don't want anything to change, ever.

You can't improve on perfection.

Low-capacity lifts means fewer skiers (no snowboards allowed) on the trails. That's why, when their iconic single chair - 1948 vintage, the last one surviving in North America - finally wore out and stopped running last April, they replaced it with a brand new single chair that looks exactly like the old one.

Expert skiers love Mad River for its challenging tree skiing and savagely steep black-diamond runs (nothing newfangled, here - you're either real expert or just a wannabe).

The only change is that the lift is now powered by electricity instead of diesel, so there's no exhaust-belching monster rumbling in the background. Even the traditionalists agree that's a change for the better.

Expert skiers love Mad River for its challenging tree skiing and savagely steep black-diamond runs (nothing newfangled, here - you're either real expert or just a wannabe).

But Mad River also has some of the finest intermediate skiing and sweetest beginner terrain in New England. They don't make snow, but they do groom certain trails. Fewer skiers keeps the snow perfect. One run on the uncrowded slopes at MRG is often more satisfying than several runs anywhere else.

Visit www.madriverglen.com or call 802-496-3551.www.madriver-glen.com

If you're visiting Mad River Glen, consider staying at Weathertop Mountain Inn (1-800-800-3625; www.weathertopmountaininn.com) on Rte. 17. Innkeepers Lisa & Michael Lang are attentive without being intrusive. The rooms are cozy, quiet and comfortable. They have a wonderful great room with a fireplace and a complete game/exercise room upstairs. They serve a hearty, delicious breakfast early enough to get you first tracks (except on a powder morning when you will want to be in line an hour before the lifts start turning.)

In the evening, the dining room serves guests only. A four-course dinner is $25 per person; taxes and beverages extra. The Langs have lived in Southeast Asia, and for $30 per person they'll take you on an five-course culinary tour of the Southeast Asian country of your choice. That's not exactly traditional New England fare, but who says change can't sometimes be good?

Su Escuela to launch pilot program

Spanish remains Su Escuela's specialty, however, the French program, which is being offered for the first time, will also be taught by native French-speaking teachers.

In 2007 Su Escuela offered the first pilot after school program at the Old Colony Montessori School in Hingham as well as the Alden Museum in Duxbury. In 2008, Su Escuela will launch a pilot program in two languages, Spanish and French, at the Deer Hill and Joseph Osgood Elementary Schools in Cohasset. This program will be offered to children in kindergarten to grade 5.

Su Escuela offers one of the most successful Spanish immersion programs in the communities of the South Shore. Last school year, Su Escuela had 200 students enrolled in its facilities from age two to adults and this year Su Escuela is expecting to increase the enrollment of students by planning to open its own facilities in Duxbury for January 2009.

Mrs. Baldeon, founder of Su Escuela said, "Our program has been successful because we built the program with the intention of obtaining what everyone expected when started, which was to learn a second language while obtaining the fluency. Our program is based on teaching primarily this fluency to children, young people and adults that are English speakers, which is often difficult to achieve. Our methodology is based on creating a fun way to learn without compromising this overall goal while interacting with the second language. Our professionals are all native Spanish speakers, with education degrees from prestigious universities, hailing from Spanish countries, which makes the program more effective than others."

Spanish remains Su Escuela's specialty, however, the French program, which is being offered for the first time, will also be taught by native French-speaking teachers. The reason, Mrs. Baldeon said, is because, "We look to continue offering the same quality in our programs no matter what the language."

If you would like to know more about the programs offered at Su Escuela or the after school programs, join them at their open house to be held from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 12, at the Su Escuela facilities at 760 Chief Justice Cushing Highway in Cohasset, across to Shaw's supermarket. For more information, call 781-383-2585, visit www.suescuela.com, or send email to info@suescuela.us.

Teacher Karen Quintana, Pre-school & Elementary Spanish Teacher, with left, Victor Wellman, 5, and Noah Jones, 5, both of Cohasset. Victor, Noah and their classmates are listening to the instructions given in Spanish by teacher Karen.

It's Happening

Rock the night away

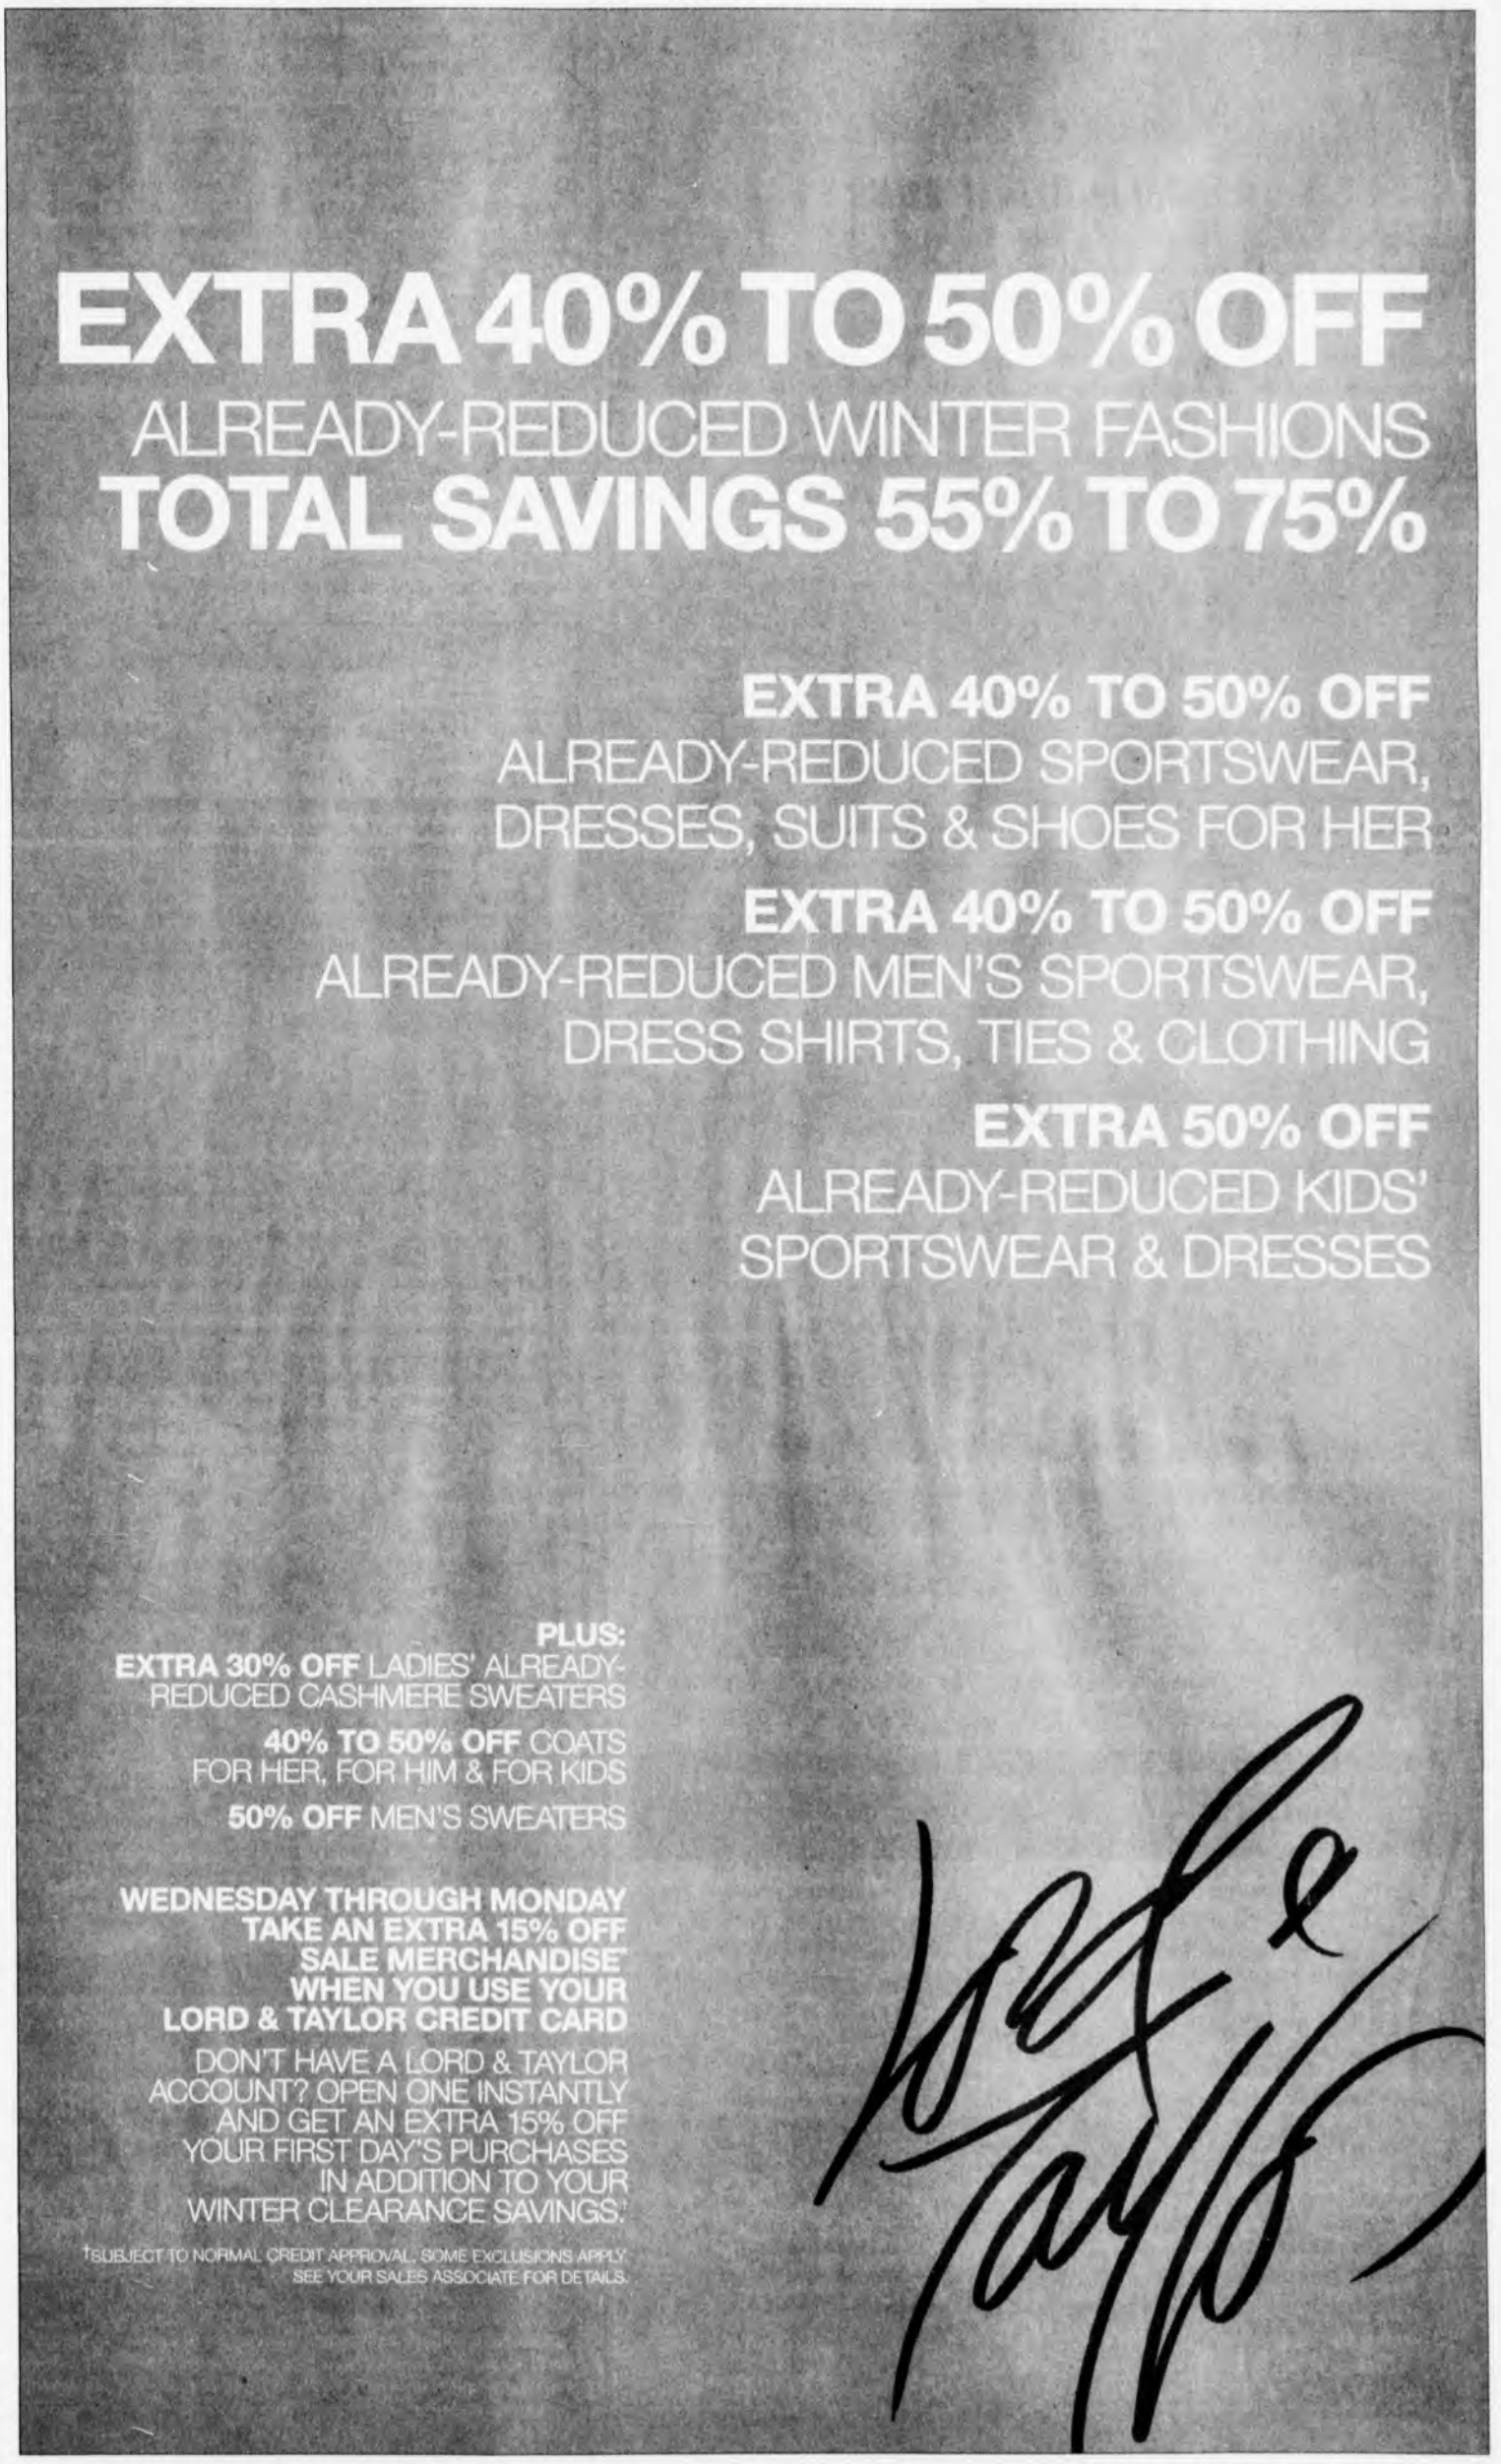
The event benefits the Cohasset Hockey team. Tickets are $20 available at the door or through any hockey team member or parent.

Mandarin Chinese for kids

This new class is being offered to children ages 7 to 9 and will introduce students to the language of Mandarin and Chinese culture. Mandarin for Kids is an eight-week session and will begin Feb. 11 at the South Shore Community Center on Mondays from 3:30 to 4:20 p.m. (based on demand, a second class may be offered from 4:30 to 5:20 p.m.). The instructor has just returned to the Boston area after living and teaching in China for four years. She will be sharing her knowledge and experiences in a small class format so spaces are limited. Call Chuck Gilliatt at 781-383 2901 or email at cgilliatt@comcast.net for more information.

Houck to offer mosaic workshop

The South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset, will offer a one-day adult mosaic workshop, taught by Boston-based artist Lisa Houck, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., on Sunday, Feb. 3. Students will learn to design a mosaic using bold, graphic shapes. Glass tiles will be cut in class and then glued to a panel to create a work of art, which is durable, colorful and full of lively patterns.



Lisa Houck works in watercolor, oil on wood, ceramics, mosaics and etching. She is a graduate of the Rhode Island School of Design and Tufts University/School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. Her artwork has been exhibited widely, and is in numerous public and private collections, including The Boston Athenaeum, Brigham and Women's Hospital, Children's Hospital, Boston, Dana Farber Cancer Institute, Fidelity Investments, Hale and Dorr, Massachusetts General Hospital, and the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

Those interested can register at the art center, by calling 781-383-2787, or by visiting www.ssac.org. The cost of the class is $95 for members and $130 for nonmembers. A $25 materials fee is payable to the instructor.

Drama Kids classes available

Drama Kids is offering after-school classes for children ages 3 through 12. The Drama Kids program focuses on developing children's verbal abilities while enhancing creativity, social confidence and building self esteem. Classes take place at locations in Scituate, Cohasset and Hingham.

Glastonbury Abbey lecture on Buddhism

Glastonbury Abbey's Inter-Religious Lecture Series, "Listening to Other Voices: Prophets of Compassion: Who Cares?" will be presented at 7:15 p.m., on Thursday, Jan. 24, at Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center, 16 Hull St., Hingham.

"Wisdom and Compassion: An Introduction to Buddhism" will be the topic of The Venerable Tenzin Priyadarshi. Where do wisdom and compassion intersect in the Buddhist faith and cultural tradition? The Venerable Tenzin LS Priyadarshi, born in Vaishali, India, into a Hindu Brahmin family, entered the monastery at age 10. He will explain Buddhist religious tradition and explore how Buddhists may practice their faith and assist not only those who suffer, but also those who are consciously or unconsciously indifferent to the less fortunate. He will also make the audience aware of what one person can do to alleviate suffering. Ven. Tenzin Priyadarshi trained in India and Nepal and was ordained by His Holiness the Dalai Lama. Bible Study series continues on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Practical Christianity. Some Christians commonly view the Old Testament as a storybook-full of fascinating tales, yet ancient and irrelevant to modern reality. This exceptional 10-week study from Insight For Living with Chuck Swindoll will help you blow the dust off these timeworn chronicles and discover enduring truths that relate directly to you, while translating into reliable patterns for godly living. Experience familiar passages as never before, and find fresh inspiration in the memorable scenes revisited. Follow the examples of faithful Old Testament heroes such as Abraham, Joseph, David, and many others as you learn to apply timeless biblical principles to your everyday life. Please join us.

Our mission statement is: "Equipping God's people for living out the Good News to be the hands, feet, voice and heart of Christ in our community and in the world." How should we accomplish this? Come hear sermons to find out.

CLASSIC COMEDY

Serious actor has fun in 'Spamalot'

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Michael Siberry spent years with The Royal Shakespeare Company performing leading roles in plays such as "The Taming of the Shrew," "All's Well That Ends Well," and "The Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby." These days, however, he's dealing with killer rabbits, flying cows, and taunting Frenchmen, not to mention splashy musical numbers, as King Arthur in "Monty Python's Spamalot." While the warped comedy of "Spamalot" may seem like an odd fit for a classically trained actor, Siberry says he wouldn't have it any other way.

"Variety is what has sustained me in my career so far. I have done my share of classical theater, but this is something I'm also very familiar with and a lot of other people of my generation are very familiar with, so it feels very natural to be doing this. It is a real treat to do schtick you remember from childhood."

Siberry may have a sheepskin from Australia's National Institute of Dramatic Art, but he is also a Monty Python fan from way back.

"I grew up watching 'Monty Python's Flying Circus' on television in Australia. It was very radical and very extreme at the time. You didn't always understand it, but you always watched it. It seems almost surreal to me that today it has become almost mainstream. It seems to reach everyone."

Winner of three 2005 Tony Awards including Best Musical, and lovingly "ripped off" from the irreverent British comedy troupe of Graham Chapman, John Cleese, Terry Gilliam, Eric Idle, Terry Jones and Michael Palin's most popular motion picture, "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" by Idle, "Monty Python's Spamalot"— which just opened a two-week run at Boston's Opera House before heading to the Providence Performing Arts Center on Jan. 29 — is directed by Mike Nichols and features a score by Idle and John Du Prez. Telling the tale of King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table, and their quest for the Holy Grail, "Spamalot" features a chorus line of dancing divas and kooky knights in the court of King Arthur. The King's combined quest not only for the Holy Grail, but also to put on a Broadway musical, has left even his most loyal subjects questioning him.

"King Arthur is slightly bewildered by the fact that people don't take him seriously. He is a very cheerful fellow, but always a bit perplexed. He does get the girl, however, so it all ends up happily ever after," says Siberry, whose Broadway credits include the role of Captain von Trapp in the 1998 revival of "The Sound of Music."

Although based on characters and situations originally depicted in the 1975 movie, the stage production's creative team has made sure it is very much its own entity.

"Mike Nichols encouraged us to reinterpret these characters as we saw fit. Mike told us we were definitely not doing a pastiche. He didn't want this to become just a carbon copy of the original and it has not. We do it our own way without mimicry. So I suppose that my King Arthur is a little different.

I just took what I saw on the page and then interpreted it in my own way." His new take on a familiar character has earned both Siberry and "Spamalot" respect from both hardcore Monty Python fans and the newly initiated over the two years since the current national tour was launched at Boston's Colonial Theatre.

"We get a good mix of longtime Monty Python fans and others who have no idea what to expect. It's beautifully written material, however, so there is something for everyone."

That something includes some lasting memories for its star.

"It will be like completing the circle to be back in Boston where it all began," explained Siberry by telephone last week from a tour stop in Schenectady. "I play Boston, then Providence, and I'm done. The tour will carry on without me. I'm looking forward to settling back into my life in New York, but I will miss this show very much, too. This entire 'Spamalot' experience has been a real highlight of my career and my life."

"Monty Pyth"s Spamalot" will be at the Opera House, 539 Washington St., Boston, through Jan. 27. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at broadwayacrossamerica.com. Following Boston, "Spamalot" will be at the Providence Performing Arts Center, 220 Weybosset St., Providence, R.I., Jan. 29 to Feb. 3. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 401-421-2787 or go online at ppacri.org.

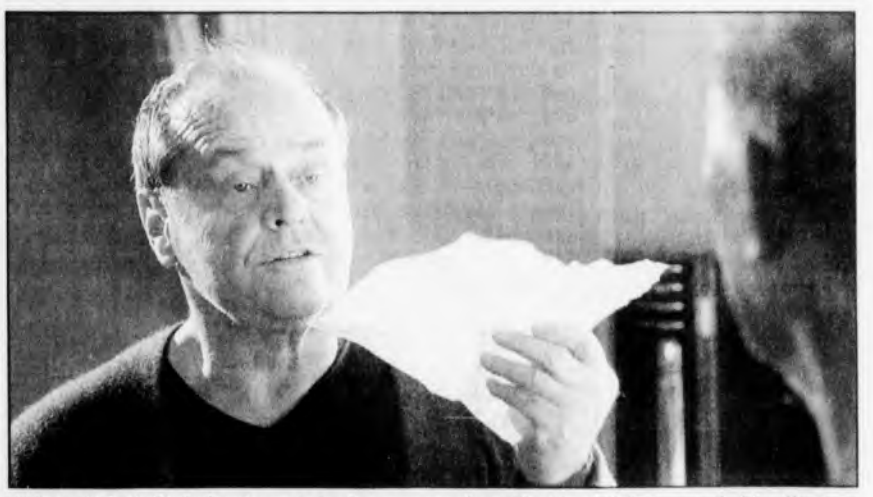
Movie review

A-'List' actors in 'B' movie

The Bucket List (B)



Film Review
BY: ED SYMKUS

You know those "to do" lists you keep in different places — at home, at work, in your wallet — that you actually get to check off once in a while? This dramatic comedy about two terminally ill guys who meet in a double hospital room suggests that you should get cooking on those lists now. That song "Enjoy Yourself (It's Later Than You Think)" from "Everyone Says I Love You" comes to mind.

Another thing that seems to be on people's minds is that "The Bucket List" — the title refers to a list of things to do before you kick the bucket — is a morbid idea for a movie. In this case, it's a wrong assumption. There's a gloomy moment or two; these guys do, after all, have cancer, and each has been allotted six months to a year, give or take.

But the teaming of Jack Nicholson as a ridiculously wealthy but lonely corporate guy who takes over then privatizes hospitals, and Morgan Freeman as a genial, chain-smoking auto mechanic who has a happy family but has outgrown his dreams, was made with comic head-butting in mind.

It's an opposites attracting story. Nicholson's Edward Cole is stubborn and iron-fisted when it comes to his career and to his inflated self-importance. Freeman's Carter Chambers is a laid back but outgoing fellow who enjoys nothing more than sharing his vast reservoir of trivial knowledge, much of which he gets from his addiction to "Jeopardy!"

Edward (Jack Nicholson) wants to know more about the "to do" list compiled by Carter (Morgan Freeman).

Watching these two guys interact is a pleasure, and it's clear that each (the actors not the characters) is having a blast reacting to the other, right from their introduction in side-by-side beds, up to their games of gin, their turns getting the shakes, and their eventual globe-hopping adventures while in temporary remission.

Director Rob Reiner, who hasn't had a bona fide hit since "A Few Good Men," also with Nicholson, has wisely just let his two old pro lead actors have a go with their parts. They manage to put a convincingly humorous touch to a vomiting scene, add a mischievous sparkle to their eyes when they decide to work on that titular list together, energetically rejoice like little kids when they're speeding around a track in race cars or through the air before pulling ripcords.

The film loses some of its grip on reality when the script deals with Carter making the decision to leave his wife at home while he goes out on this final adventure — that subject alone would make for an interesting film. But here it's glossed over rather than dealt with.

And soon he and Edward, who's generously and easily footing the exorbitant bill, are jetting around the world to great European restaurants, to the Taj Mahal (where Carter spouts off some detailed historical perspective) to the pyramids (where they just sit and contemplate).

Comic highlights include the banter between Nicholson and his assistant — and private cook — Thomas (played in deadpan manner by "Will & Grace's" Sean Hayes) and from Nicholson's willingness to take a couple of pratfalls.

But the film's serious edge has plenty of opportunity to shine, and does so in the "life's ups and downs" conversations between Edward and Carter that predictably bring the two opposites together. There are a couple of token thought-provoking scenes of Virginia (Beverly Todd) demanding that Edward give her husband back to her, and Freeman's practically film-length voiceovers (has Freeman ever been in a film that he hasn't also narrated?) manage to combine a sense of gravity and whimsy.

It's hard to watch the film and not think about the similar but far goofier premise of "My Name Is Earl" and that TV show's list of accomplishments to be checked off. But this is an "Earl" for a more mature audience. This also marks a probable return to hit-making status for Reiner. Fans of foreshadowing will enjoy what he eventually does with a Chock Full o' Nuts coffee can seen right near the start, and will likely equally enjoy the bittersweet ride he makes of his film.

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

(L-R)... Benjamin Zep Misek, Rosie Mattia, Ryan Nearhoff, Vernae Taylor and Michael Bojtos perform in "Almost Heaven: The Songs of John Denver," playing at The Company Theatre in Norwell Jan. 18-20.

The musical revue "Almost Heaven: The Songs of John Denver" uses 29 of Denver's songs — including "Rocky Mountain High," "Sunshine on My Shoulders," "Annie's Song," "Leaving on a Jet Plane," and "Calypso" — performed against a backdrop of visual images of America in the late 1960s and early '70s, to make its case that Denver was more than just a gifted songwriter with an ear for popular music.

Denver, who died Oct. 12, 1997, when the two-seater plane he was piloting crashed off the coast of California, was a celebrity who used his considerable fame to further the causes he cared about from environmental conservation and world hunger to space and oceanic explorations. He also tried to enhance understanding between people of diverse cultures as the first Western entertainer to tour extensively in both China and the former Soviet Union.

Denver's songs provide the musical narrative for "Almost Heaven" which begins a three-show run at Norwell's Company Theatre on Friday. A live theatrical experience originally conceived by Harold Thau with orchestrations, vocal arrangements, and music supervision by Jeff Waxman, the national tour features a five-member cast, and a three-person on-stage band under the direction of Newton native Seth Weinstein.

"We're using new arrangements and we have a cast of fresh, young, very talented performers, so it is like we are reinventing and reinvigorating some very familiar music in a way it has never been heard before," explained Weinstein from his home in New York last week. "Ultimately, our show is a celebration of the music of John Denver and how he used it to express his attitudes toward the Vietnam War, his marriage to his first wife, Annie, and even his DUI arrests. The trajectory of songs provides a journey that starts out very light, but at times turns very dark." A 1992 Newton North graduate who earned an AB in Music from Harvard in 1996, Weinstein remembers when he first discovered Denver's music. "I've been familiar with John Denver's music since childhood. I grew up with it. A great deal of it is very moving. It's also fun to play. The songs get renewed for me every night. The songs are tuneful and the lyrics are wonderful. They are very easy to relate to and enjoy. They will definitely last beyond this generation."

Seth Weinstein

While his current assignment will keep him on the road for the next few months, Weinstein is already looking ahead to a return to another kind of music and performing.

"I love music directing, arranging and composing for theater, but I also love playing classical music," says Weinstein, whose musical "How to Save the World and Find True Love in 90 Minutes" enjoyed a healthy off-Broadway run in 2006. "In September of this year, I will be on tour in Germany playing classical piano concerts which will include 'The Chagall Suite,' a piece I wrote that was inspired by the paintings of Marc Chagall."

Before he starts planning for that trip, however, Weinstein knows he needs to make a tour stop a little closer to home that will give him a chance not only to see, but also to work with members of his family.

"My brother, Josh Weinstein, will be playing guitar with me in Norwell. He has his own very successful career, but he was available for these dates so I was very happy to book him. He is a great musician."

"Almost Heaven: The Songs of John Denver" will be at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, Jan. 18-20. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787, or go online at companytheatre.com.

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

(L-R)... Benjamin Zep Misek, Rosie Mattia, Ryan Nearhoff, Vernae Taylor and Michael Bojtos perform in "Almost Heaven: The Songs of John Denver," playing at The Company Theatre in Norwell Jan. 18-20.

The musical revue "Almost Heaven: The Songs of John Denver" uses 29 of Denver's songs — including "Rocky Mountain High," "Sunshine on My Shoulders," "Annie's Song," "Leaving on a Jet Plane," and "Calypso" — performed against a backdrop of visual images of America in the late 1960s and early '70s, to make its case that Denver was more than just a gifted songwriter with an ear for popular music.

Denver, who died Oct. 12, 1997, when the two-seater plane he was piloting crashed off the coast of California, was a celebrity who used his considerable fame to further the causes he cared about from environmental conservation and world hunger to space and oceanic explorations. He also tried to enhance understanding between people of diverse cultures as the first Western entertainer to tour extensively in both China and the former Soviet Union.

Denver's songs provide the musical narrative for "Almost Heaven" which begins a three-show run at Norwell's Company Theatre on Friday. A live theatrical experience originally conceived by Harold Thau with orchestrations, vocal arrangements, and music supervision by Jeff Waxman, the national tour features a five-member cast, and a three-person on-stage band under the direction of Newton native Seth Weinstein.

"We're using new arrangements and we have a cast of fresh, young, very talented performers, so it is like we are reinventing and reinvigorating some very familiar music in a way it has never been heard before," explained Weinstein from his home in New York last week. "Ultimately, our show is a celebration of the music of John Denver and how he used it to express his attitudes toward the Vietnam War, his marriage to his first wife, Annie, and even his DUI arrests. The trajectory of songs provides a journey that starts out very light, but at times turns very dark." A 1992 Newton North graduate who earned an AB in Music from Harvard in 1996, Weinstein remembers when he first discovered Denver's music. "I've been familiar with John Denver's music since childhood. I grew up with it. A great deal of it is very moving. It's also fun to play. The songs get renewed for me every night. The songs are tuneful and the lyrics are wonderful. They are very easy to relate to and enjoy. They will definitely last beyond this generation."

Seth Weinstein

While his current assignment will keep him on the road for the next few months, Weinstein is already looking ahead to a return to another kind of music and performing.

"I love music directing, arranging and composing for theater, but I also love playing classical music," says Weinstein, whose musical "How to Save the World and Find True Love in 90 Minutes" enjoyed a healthy off-Broadway run in 2006. "In September of this year, I will be on tour in Germany playing classical piano concerts which will include 'The Chagall Suite,' a piece I wrote that was inspired by the paintings of Marc Chagall."

Before he starts planning for that trip, however, Weinstein knows he needs to make a tour stop a little closer to home that will give him a chance not only to see, but also to work with members of his family.

"My brother, Josh Weinstein, will be playing guitar with me in Norwell. He has his own very successful career, but he was available for these dates so I was very happy to book him. He is a great musician."

"Almost Heaven: The Songs of John Denver" will be at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, Jan. 18-20. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787, or go online at companytheatre.com.

Cyclocross gets family geared up

Father, mother, son all participate in sport

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's rare to find a sport that an entire family can participate in and enjoy. But, one family in Cohasset has found such a sport in cyclocross.

While the name makes many think of motorcycles or dirt bikes, cyclocross is a type of bike racing. It's a timed race around a short course of about 1.5 to 2 miles featuring a combination of grass, pavement, wooded trails, steep hills, stairs and barrier obstacles. It's a niche sport but has a growing following in New England and even on the South Shore.

The Morse Family of Forest Avenue are avid participants. Sam Morse, father and husband, has been involved in cycling for over 20 years, principally as a road cyclist. About 10 years ago he got back into competing in cyclocross races and hasn't looked back.

"A lot of cyclists do [cyclocross] to extend their cycling season, stay fit and it's fun," says Sam. Cyclocross became a family activity once his son Nate, a seventh grader at Cohasset Middle School, started competing at age nine.

"It's something we can do together as a family," says Trish Morse, mother and wife. After several years of primarily being a spectator of the sport, Trish decided to give cyclocross a shot this past season. Last spring, she trained to participate in the 100-mile Best Buddies charity cycling ride — all three family member completed the race.

Alternative energy meets Sustainable Cohasset group

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

To make significant strides toward a sustainable community, Cohasset is likely going to need the support of all residents. To that end, the Alternative Energy Committee is reaching out to private organizations like Sustainable Cohasset to gain momentum for their objectives, many of which could be on the table for the upcoming Annual Town Meeting.

Members of the AEC attended the monthly meeting of Sustainable Cohasset to discuss their current initiatives.

Knowing the strapped town operational budget, the AEC is focused on providing energy alternatives where there is both minimal upfront cost to taxpayers and a good return on the investment.

With that in mind, AEC Chairman Andrew Willard said there is a possibility a large 10-kilowatt solar photovoltaic (PV) array, could be installed on the roof of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library at little or no cost to the town. The installed cost of the solar panels is about $100,000.

Tapping the artist within

SSAC's program in its fourth year

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Every child has a little bit of an artist in them. To bring out that little piece inside everyone, the South Shore Art Center has a program, now in its fourth year, where students from across the region can come to enjoy, learn and create art.

Each week, the Artist in Residence program welcomes children from as far as Bridgewater or as close as Deer Hill School. It's a hands-on experience where students learn about the process of creating art pieces from an Art Center gallery artist, then are offered the chance to try it for themselves.

In past years the Artist in Residence has taught photography, pastel painting and collage. For this school year, the focus is on printmaking and etching.

"The most important thing I want each child to realize is they are all artists," says this year's Artist in Residence Danguole Rita Kuolas, "it's just a matter of learning the process and tools to be successful."

A fifth grade group from the Eames Way School in Marshfield attended this week's Artist in Residence program Wednesday morning, the program is targeted toward third-, fourth- and fifth-grade students.

A two-alarm fire destroyed much of this home on Monday morning.

Two-alarm fire on Howe Road

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

On Monday, shortly after 1a.m., the sound of smoke alarms pierced the silent night awakening the residents of a Howe Road home in North Cohasset. That sound may have saved their lives.

After finding light smoke in the house and hearing fire overhead in the attic, the homeowner gathered everyone and exited the house to call 911.

After receiving the 911 call from the family around 1:20a.m., Cohasset police officers were first to arrive on the scene, followed shortly after by a Hull Fire engine. Soon after Hull's arrival, Cohasset engines pulled up. The firefighters headed into to the residence at 106 Howe Road to battle the blaze.

"The fire has a bigger head start than we originally thought," said Fire Chief Robert Silvia and the volume of fire was too large to fight from the interior. Firefighters exited the home and shortly after the roof of the one and half story ranch collapsed. The firefighters began to fight the fire from the exterior before entering the house again.

Mutual aid was sought from Hull, Hingham and Scituate. Norwell firefighters covered the station while all Cohasset units were at the scene.

Firefighters were on the scene over five hours until 6:30a.m., with a detail truck remaining afterwards in case the flames started back up again.

The family of six spent the remainder of the night in a hotel, but planned to move in with friends for the near future, officials said. Even the family cat, which was initially thought missing, was found in the first floor of the home and returned safely to the family. The name of the family couldn't be confirmed by press time.

"The house sustained major damage including serious structural damage," said Silvia, but it will be up to the homeowner and the insurance company to determine if it is a total loss.

The cause of the fire is still under investigation, but officials believe it was started in the area around the chimney. Representatives from the state fire marshal's office were called in to investigate the blaze as standard procedure when the cause of a fire is not obvious. The cause of the fire is not considered to be suspicious.

"The smoke detectors did their job, warned the family and they were able to exit the building safely," said Silvia, "we were able to get there quickly and do our thing."

It's another example of the importance of having smoke detectors, making sure they work and having a family meeting place established, said Silvia.

POLICE BEAT

Four arrested following drug rip-off

On Jan. 23, at approximately 1:57 p.m., Cohasset Police received a 911 call from a citizen reporting that four males had just assaulted another male on Norfolk Road in Cohasset. A description of the suspect vehicle was broadcasted to responding patrols and a Hull police officer performing a traffic detail subsequently located the suspect vehicle on Jerusalem Road. After several attempts to stop the vehicle, the vehicle was finally stopped in the area of 449 Jerusalem Road. As the officer approached, two of the occupants ran from the vehicle and escaped into back yards on the west side of Jerusalem Road. Cohasset Police, with the assistance of Hull, Hingham and Scituate Police, established a perimeter and called for K-9 assistance from Scituate and Hull police while another officer interviewed the victim.

Preliminary investigation disclosed that the four male subjects had agreed to meet the victim to purchase a quantity of illegal drugs. After picking the victim up, the victim was physically assaulted by one of the occupants of the vehicle and robbed of the drugs that he had intended to sell to the four males. He was then told to exit the vehicle and was physically assaulted a second time on the side of the road.

The two suspects who remained in the vehicle were placed under arrest and at approximately 2:33 p.m., one of the suspects that had fled was apprehended in the area of Forest Avenue and Jerusalem Road. At approximately 3:23 p.m., a 911 caller reported seeing a male crouched alongside a house on Old Coach Road. Several patrols and two K-9 units were immediately dispatched to the area. As the officers closed in on the fourth suspect, he entered a Ford Explorer that was parked at a residence on Old Coach Road and drove off at a high rate of speed toward several police officers standing in the roadway before colliding with an unmarked Scituate Police vehicle. Following the collision, the fourth suspect was taken into custody after a brief struggle.

The Cohasset Police Criminal Investigation Division is conducting a parallel investigation into the drug distribution aspect of this incident.

The three adult male suspects were held overnight at the Cohasset Police station pending arraignment at Quincy District Court on Jan. 24 on the following charges:

- Juvenile male, age 15. Charge: Unarmed robbery.
- Edward S. Long, age 19, 2 Friend St., Hingham. Charges: Unarmed robbery; failure to stop for a police officer.
- James C. Barkas, age 22, 238 Hull St., Hingham. Charges: Assault to murder; assault with dangerous weapon; two counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon; assault and battery on a police officer; unarmed robbery; larceny of a motor vehicle; operating a motor vehicle with revoked license as HTO; reckless operation of a motor vehicle; resisting arrest; failure to stop for a police officer.
- Barkas was also wanted on four felony arrest warrants from three different jurisdictions.
- Ryan J. Cinquergrano, age 24, 161 Nokomis Road, Hingham. Charges: Unarmed robbery; resisting arrest.

The 15-year-old juvenile was release to guardian(s).

Police Chief James Hussey said this was a great example of law enforcement, with the community's assistance, working together to take some dangerous felons off the street.

"Starting with the original 911 call, the dispatchers coordinating police resources from Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Cohasset, the continued calls from the public providing further information and the determined efforts of the officers on the street is a tremendous credit to all personnel involved," he said.

Pockebooks taken

Over the past week an 87-year-old Scituate woman and an 18-year-old Cohasset woman both reported that their pocketbooks had been stolen from their unlocked cars after they dashed into the post office.

The Scituate woman told police she left her bag in the car with the side door unlocked. Police looked around the area and have not located the pocketbook. The woman lost credit cards, her license and about $100 in cash.

That same day, the Cohasset woman left her purse inside the car while she ran into the post office to buy some stamps. She estimates she was gone for five minutes and got home before she realized her purse was gone. She reversed her steps and determined it had been taken while she was parked at the post office.

Both the thefts occurred on Tuesday (Jan. 15).

There has been a rash of similar thefts in parking lots in Cohasset, like Shaw's and Stop & Shop, and outside convenience stores in Hingham.

Chief James Hussey again urges all residents to lock any valuables in the trunk of the car, even if they plan to be away from the car for just a quick errand.

If anyone has seen anything suspicious, they should call the police at 781-383-1055.

Dunkin Donuts break-in

Detectives are investigating a break-in that occurred sometime overnight Sunday (Jan. 20) at Dunkin Donuts on King Street. When the manager arrived at 4:30 a.m., the door was forced open and access had been gained to the office area. An undetermined amount of money was taken. Detectives processed the scene and have gathered evidence.

Wires down

A tractor-trailer took down a bunch of low-hanging wires last week on Ripley Road and snapped the top of the pole. Because some of the wires were "live" the fire department evacuated some of the nearby stores and businesses until National Grid could respond. The incident occurred Wednesday (Jan. 16) at about 12:20 p.m.

Spotlight

While Hollywood actors might enjoy the spotlight, Cohasset homeowners certainly do not.

Police received a complaint last week about a vehicle that had been shining a spotlight on the house across the street at 4:15 a.m. that morning.

The concerned resident went to the station to speak to an officer later that day.

Chief Hussey said police investigated but could not find anything. The night had been very windy and Hussey speculated that it could have been a truck from National Grid checking for downed wires.

Verbal dispute

An incident of "parking lot rage" outside Shaw's spilled into the supermarket resulting in a 9-1-1 call to police. The two people had been involved in a near "miss" that resulted in a verbal altercation. The call to police last Thursday (Jan. 17) at about 7:40 p.m. was from a third party, Chief Hussey said. Police talked to the two individuals involved and peace was restored.

Beer stolen

A large quantity of beer was stolen from a locked cooler at the Red Lion Inn last week. The thief used a bolt cutter to gain access to the cooler. Police are working with the management and are reviewing surveillance tapes, Chief Hussey said.

Warrant service

Cohasset police served an arrest warrant last week on a 23-year-old Cohasset resident for motor vehicle violations. Chief Hussey said the warrant was a follow-up to a letter police sent the resident notifying him that he had outstanding violations.

Alternative energy meets Sustainable Cohasset

But to get grants and matching funds from a state sponsored program to do the project the AEC needs community support. They are encouraging residents to sign up for National Grid's Clean Energy Choice Green Start program. Signing up means households pay a between $5 and $10 on each month's electric bill and the money supports the development of renewable energy. Each additional participating household helps to earn matching grants for the town.

Cohasset currently has roughly 30 households participating in the program and already $7,000 in grant funding is available to the town. If Cohasset were able to get 240 households, or roughly 12 percent of the town's homes participating, by April 30 they would be eligible to receive grants totaling $100,000 to install a solar array on the library's roof, Willard said. Grants are available from the Massachusetts Technology Collaborative for about $37,000 and the Green Start program is offering grants ranging from $13,000 to $56,000 (depending on how many households sign up for the program).

"Over its 30-year life span, the solar wall could save the town about $1 million."
— Andrew Willard, AEC Chairman

The large solar array could provide over 5 percent of the library's total electric consumption and could reduce its annual electric bill by $2,000, Willard said.

The AEC is also looking to harness the power of the sun in a different way for another municipal building in town — the DPW garage at the transfer station. A southerly facing wall is the ideal location for a relatively simple technology called a solar wall. The solar wall is a mechanism to pre-heat the air before it enters the building. A piece of steel, with thousands of tiny pinholes is installed on the side of the building, air is pulled up from the bottom of the panel and heats the air from 20 degrees (or whatever the outside temperature is) to about 50 degrees. The result is the oil heating system does not have to work as hard, or expend as much energy, to heat the building's air to a comfortable temperature.

The cost of installing a solar wall is under $40,000, but the mechanism will pay for itself in saving in about five years. The first year savings at current oil prices is estimated to be $4,300.

"Over its 30-year life span, the solar wall could save the town about $1 million," said Willard. "Deer Hill and Middle-High School offer potential as well, but this will be a very good model."

The AEC is proposing a spending article to do this project for the upcoming Annual Town Meeting, the Board of Selectmen will have to give its vote of approval to place the article on the warrant.

While solar energy holds real possibility, the AEC has been actively looking at the wind turbines. A meteorological experimental test, or MET tower, is collecting wind data on Turkey Hill to ensure a windmill is feasible. At the upcoming Town Meeting they are proposing establishing a wind turbine bylaw, which would establish regulations for commercial sized windmills.

"It would allow the town to accept large wind turbines to be placed anywhere in town as long as it meets setback requirements," said AEC member Mike Bliss. Only four parcels in town have land suitable for a turbine about the size of Hull's Wind I by the high school: behind the Middle-High School, at the transfer station, behind Hingham Lumber (Graham Waste) and Turkey Hill.

The bylaw does not include regulations for residential windmills, but if a resident would like to install a backyard wind turbine they can apply to the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The members of Sustainable Cohasset were receptive to the AEC's efforts toward energy alternatives for the town.

"The crossover between our organizations is beneficial to us," said Willard.

Governor's numbers fall short of predictions

Numbers from Governor's budget released this week were a little short than what the school administration and the School Committee had hoped for from the state. Chapter 70 state aid came in just over $50,000 short of the school's projections.

Chapter 70 state aid came in just over $50,000 short of the school's projections.

The school's draft budget presented in late December anticipated $1.84 million in state aid, or a one percent increase, over last year's Chapter 70 allocation. The proposed Chapter 70 state aid is $91,844 over the last year's fiscal 2008 budget.

Although other sections of the Governor's budget could change, Superintendent Denise Walsh was confident the Chapter 70 funds would not change.

"The only thing that is sound is Chapter 70," said Walsh, explaining those numbers are based on a complex formula that is not likely to change through the budget process.

With this new information, the School Committee plans to look at their options, but has a positive outlook that they could make it work. "Regardless of the $52,000, we're in pretty good shape," said Chairman Rick Flynn.

Walsh named a few items she thought the committee wanted to look at including fees, class size (particularly at Deer Hill) and enrichment programs.

"Now, we know what we're working with," said Walsh. A budget sub-committee meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, Jan. 30 at 6p.m.

Unsafe ice on Lily Pond this winter

There will be no winter activity on Lily Pond this winter. To reduce the amount of discolored tap water in the distribution system, the Water Department has installed a system of aeration tubes in Lily Pond. The units create a steady stream of tiny bubbles that rise to the surface of the water.

Because of the unsafe ice, warnings have been posted and the police will enforce the ban on any winter activity on Lily Pond. The Water Department has discussed this with the Recreation Department, Police Department, Town Manager and Fire Department so all affected town agencies are working together to ensure a safe winter.

The bubbles will add oxygen to the pond water helping to reduce some of the iron and manganese that is dissolved in the pond water, which should help to reduce discolored water in the water distribution system. The aeration system will also improve the ecological state of the pond, according to the Water Department.

Two pull papers for Sewer Comm.

Dow, Sawchuk could seek seat

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

One other race is possible so far as four candidates have pulled papers to run for Library Trustee...

Two citizens are putting their hats into the ring for the one open Sewer Commission seat: Wayne Sawchuk of 432 Beechwood St. and James Dow of 502 North Main St. Sitting member Ray Kasperowicz is not seeking re-election.

Sawchuk, a familiar name in town politics, says he brings a construction and real estate background to the table. Although he says he has now retired from developing land, with the exception of a parcel in the village, he can bring a different perspective to the board. In particular, he says his experience is relevant given the Little Harbor sewer project is one of the largest municipal undertakings ever by the town.

"There are things to do in the future," said Sawchuk, a lifelong resident of the town, "we have to be careful not to extend sewer so much to allow increased development."

"I know the hours and hard work involved in being a town committee member," said Sawchuk. He has served stints on the Planning Board, Advisory Committee and Capital Budget Committee, "volunteering for the town is nothing new to me."

Dow has practical knowledge of sewer operations after 21 years of working for the Hingham Sewer Department, 17 years as a supervisor. He has lived in Cohasset for 12 years.

"I thought it might be a good fit for me and my experience could benefit the town," said Dow in a phone interview. His wife noticed the open seat on the Commission and encouraged him to pull papers, this will be his first run for a town elected seat.

The Sewer Commission has big issues to deal with in the coming years, the ongoing Little Harbor water and sewer project will bring almost 500 new homes onto the sewer system some will come tie-in within the next three years — the length of the term.

"It will be a great benefit for the resident as well as the environment," said Dow.

One other race is possible so far as four candidates have pulled papers to run for Library Trustee and there are only three three-year positions available. George Haley of 119 Pleasant St. and Mary Lou Lawrence of 15 Beach St. could vie for a seat with incumbents Rodney Hobson of 31 Deep Run and Sheila Evans of 72 North Main St. Citizens are not considered candidates until they return their papers with the required signatures.

Three-term Selectman Fred Koed pulled papers to run for re-election. Robin Lawrence, a sitting Board of Health member, and Mary Granville, a current member of the Board of Assessors, pulled papers to retain their seats.

The last day to take out nomination papers is Thursday, Feb. 14. In order to hold a position you must be registered voter of the town.

Positions available for the 2008 town election include: Selectmen — two for three-year positions; Moderator — one three-year position; Town Clerk - one three-years position; School Committee — one three-year position; Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three three-year positions; Assessor—one three-year position; Board of Health — one three-year position; Planning Board — one for five-year position and one three-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Recreation Commission - one five-year position and one two-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Sewer Commission-one three-year position; and Water Commission — one three-year position.

Waterfront study possible

Planning Board to request $25,000

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"What we learned from the village is to do this right, we need to bring in an expert and it brings a professionalism to it."
— Alfred Moore, Planning Board

The Planning Board is revving up for another in-depth study of a key area of town. While the village was under the microscope last year — and got a complete zoning bylaw overhaul — the waterfront harbor area could be next.

Members of the Planning Board voted to seek a $25,000 appropriation from Town Meeting to hire a consultant to look at waterfront and evaluate the current zoning bylaws at a recent meeting.

Residents may recall there was a citizen's petition on the Special Town Meeting warrant to amend the waterfront zoning bylaws, but the effort was indefinitely postponed. The proposed bylaw amendments incorporated relevant aspects found in the village bylaw amendments, specifically allowing mixed-use development with apartments/condominiums. Back in November, the Planning Board told the primary proponent attorney Charles Humphreys it was considering a master plan study for the harbor in the upcoming year. Now, the Planning Board is making good on its promise.

"What we learned from the village is to do this right, we need to bring in an expert and it brings a professionalism to it," said Planning Board chairman Alfred Moore, more so than if the planning board and other town entities did it alone. The village consulting firm, Concord Square Development of Boston, led by principal Angus Jennings was hired under an expandable contract and is interested in working with Cohasset again, said planning board members.

Humphreys was hired by Peter Roy of 49 Margin St. and owner of much of the very limited Waterfront Business District, which includes the businesses on the harbor side of Border Street — Cohasset Harbor Inn, Atlantica, Olde Salt House and the Mill River Marine — ending at the Border Street bridge. The small storefronts near the intersection of Elm Street and Border Street are considered downtown zoning district, not the waterfront.

At the last Planning Board meeting (January 9) there was some debate on whether the waterfront district was in need of zoning facelift.

"The village is old and however it looks we like it," said planning board member Bob Sturdy of the feelings that prompted the town to look at the village zoning bylaws as a method to preserve what was there. He said the town common and town hall were other examples, "the whole community wanted to preserve those areas."

But, the harbor business district was a different story, according to Sturdy, claiming not all residents were enamored with the boxy structure of the Cohasset Harbor Inn and would rather not seen apartments/condos there.

"It's not the highest and best use of the area," said Sturdy, "we should be looking for ways to improve by demolishing."

At a meeting with the Board of Selectmen in November, Humphreys said his client would like to convert the second and third floors of the Cohasset Harbor Inn to 16-18 condominium units. Right now, the bylaw prohibits residential use. Sturdy argued many in town would like to see open space or increased harbor views where the inn is located.

Moore said while that may or may not be the case, a study of the waterfront would help determine if bylaw changes are warranted and would increase the economic viability of the district.

"I think we could see more dynamic change in the harbor because of the value of the property," said Tom Callahan of 35 Hillside Drive from the audience.

"I want the funding to see what's in the best interest of the town," said Sturdy, not the interests of a private landowner. Humphreys agreed, "everything is on the table."

A request of $25,000 for the waterfront study will be put forth at Town Meeting, as well as language to allow monetary donations. Humphreys relayed Roy may be willing to contribute to the town's general fund to offset the cost.

CHECKING IN

Hello Cohasset. How is everyone doing this month? News has been very slow but that happens during the slow cold months of winter. Let me know about any special birthdays, events or other news you may have to share. As I was out walking the other day, I looked around to watch families skating and playing on the ice at the Common. It was so nice to see and watch as kids practiced, parents talked with one another and it looked like a perfect winter scene. Make sure to try to get outside and enjoy some of this weather, not only is it pretty, it will be one more day closer to SPRING! Great job to all the kids and the parents who were on skates and doing so well.

Aisling, a first-year student exploratory major at St. Michael's, graduated from Cohasset Junior/Senior High School before going to St. Michael's.

St. Michael's Liturgical Choir performs in its own eclectic and popular musical style, using a combination of African, Latin American and Irish flavors, along with traditional hymn singing. Guided by their mission of inspiring sung prayer, they perform with enthusiasm and enhance the experience of all who hear them. The group was one of the select few choirs invited to perform by Pope John Paul II at World Youth Day in Denver, Colo., in the '90s.

CYBSA ONLINE

The Cohasset Youth Baseball & Softball Association (CYBSA) is holding its annual registration for the upcoming baseball and softball spring season ONLINE now through Feb. 1. Attention Cohasset High School Senior Class parents! There will be a Post Prom Planning meeting on Thursday, Jan. 31 in the High School library at 7 p.m.. All parents are needed and welcome to start planning the Class of 2008 Post Prom Party. Agenda items include deciding on a theme and forming committees. If you cannot attend, but would like to participate, please call or email Ann Kelly at 781-383-2069 or annfkelly@aol.com.

HAVE A HEART

The Friends of Women's Health, a committee of the Friends of South Shore Hospital, invite the public to join them for the annual "Have a Heart Tennis Challenge and Celebration," Saturday, Feb. 2, at The Weymouth Club, 75 Finnell Drive in Weymouth. There's no need to be John McEnroe or Martina Navritilova to enjoy this event.

Guests don't need to participate in the round-robin tennis tournament — they can just come and enjoy dinner, a silent auction and dancing with music provided by the Fat City Band!

The event is a blast, but the cause it supports is very serious. Heart disease is the number one killer of women in the United States, and cardiovascular issues are one of the biggest concerns for all people. South Shore Hospital is committed to beating heart disease through its new Cardiovascular Center that includes three cardiac catheterization labs, a 10-bed patient care area, four procedure rooms, a 64-slice CT scanner, and an integrated cardiovascular information system. The Center also offers wireless EKG/cardiac stress testing, vascular ultrasound, echocardiography, electrophysiology, nuclear cardiology, and other cardiovascular testing services.

For tickets or more information, please call (781) 340-4170 or (781) 340-3788.

That is all we have for this week. Send in all of your news no later than Tuesdays by 5 pm.

Cohasset Girl Scouts receive Gold Award

The Award Ceremony included a special presentation to their leader, Alison Callahan, who had been their troop leader for 13 years.

Four Cohasset girls from the Seashore Service Unit, Patriots' Trail Council, Troop 4778, have achieved the highest award attainable, the Girl Scouts of the USA Gold Award. They are: Kathryn Elizabeth Callahan, Aisling C. Guinee, Colleen Reid Richardson and Virginia Anne Spofford.

The Gold Award symbolizes outstanding accomplishment in the areas of leadership, community service, career planning and personal development. It is the equivalent of the Boy Scout Eagle Award. Prior to these four recipients, only five other girls have completed the requirements of the Gold Award, since it's renaming in 1980.

Each of the girls fulfilled specific requirements for the award, conforming to guidelines established by Girl Scouts of the USA and approved by the local Patriots' Trail Council. They each completed a service project geared toward their own interests and as a compilation of all that they learned in Girl Scouting. The projects provided a leadership platform, and resulted in a positive impact to their community or project population, while being designed to continue into the future.

Virginia Spofford, now attending Wake Forest University in North Carolina, developed an historical walking tour of the downtown Cohasset area. Colleen Richardson, a freshman at Dartmouth College, designed a mentoring program in the middle/high schools for girls interested in math and science. Aisling Guinee, now at St Michael's College, organized an annual caucus of regional towns to present and explain the septic data collection results of the Center for Student Coastal Research and the training of student populations for future scientific studies. Katie Callahan, organized a platform to learn about environmentally important issues such as global warming and presented her project at Champlain College.

Katie, Aisling, Colleen and Virginia received their Gold Awards from Sheila Bestick, a Patriots' Trail Council representative on Jan. 3. Each girl also received various other citations from government officials, including citations and congratulations from the President and First Lady, George and Laura Bush, Gov. Deval Patrick and other state and federal officials. Selectman Paul Carlson awarded them a commendation and Town Manager Bill Griffin presented each girl with an American flag, which had been flown over the Cohasset Common, representing the years of service and dedication they had shown the town. The girls had all been a part of Troop 4778 for at least 12 years, some since kindergarten. Many of their Girl Scout projects over the years had been on behalf of the town, including Earth Day Clean-up, Town-wide Girl Scout Encampment and many community service projects, and they all graduated from Cohasset High School last May. Lillian Curley, Service Unit chairwoman, presented the girls with Lifetime Membership pins, as they are now registered in Girl Scouts of the USA as adults.

The Award Ceremony included a special presentation to their leader, Alison Callahan, who had been their troop leader for 13 years. Callahan received the Outstanding Leader Award, having been nominated to the Service Unit for her extraordinary dedication and commitment in motivating this troop with remarkable mentoring and guidance through their high school years. The ceremony also included a candle and ribbon ceremony presented by younger town Girl Scouts and an inspiring solo, "Defying Gravity" from "Wicked," performed by fellow troop member, Anne Chapman.

Martin Luther King's philosophy lives on

Breakfast honors civil rights leader

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Frigid temperatures in the teens didn't deter many Cohasset residents — both young and old — from attending the annual Martin Luther King Jr. Day breakfast. Each year, the venue changes and it was St. Anthony's hosting on Monday morning. The Diversity Committee and the Cohasset Clergy sponsor the event.

About 50 people crowded into the light filled room to discuss Dr. King's vision and philosophy while enjoying a pancake breakfast. The featured speaker was Richard Tarlaian, a certified trainer in Kingian Non-violence at the University of Rhode Island Center for Nonviolence and Peace Studies.

He said there was a bit of irony in his being asked to speak on non-violence because "I have spent most of my life in the other persuasion." At 18, he joined the Army and fought in the Vietnam War and then spent 34 years as a police officer in Providence.

Jeff Stone, left, is served a pancake breakfast at the Saint Anthony Parish Church Hall by Molly McElgunn. Stone works with youth and police in Boston and attended the Martin Luther King, Jr. Day Celebration to hear the guest speaker, Richard Tarlaian, who also works with the police to promote nonviolence.

"I was born and raised and trained into violence," said Tarlaian, "I've seen enough to know it doesn't work."

However, since leaving the police force after 34 years, Tarlaian has pursued a non-violent life. Tarlaian said he wanted to speak to the group of the Dr. King beyond his famous "I have a dream" speech at the Lincoln Memorial.

"They shot at Dr. King, but they missed," said Tarlaian meaning that King's philosophy and influence would live on indefinitely, "The reason that I am here is because they missed."

"He was for justice, not for any one group," said Tarlaian, he stood up against the "triple evils" of racism, war and poverty. He said King, if alive today, would stand up against discrimination or abuse not only against race but also any group based on religion, sexual orientation, ability, economic standing or gender.

"He was someone who wanted to comfort the afflicted and afflict the comfortable," said Tarlaian, speaking specifically to materialism in society.

Tarlaian discussed the six principles of Kingian non-violence, or "the will," the core of King's non-violent approach. King's first principle is "non-violence is a way of life for courageous people."

"Nonviolence is always superior to violence," Tarlaian explained, it is not passive, but rather spiritually active and creative in its approach, "it takes a lot more courage not to fight."

With his presentation, Tarlaian said he could only touch the surface of King's philosophy but hoped to educate and provoke Cohasset residents to want to know more.

Representatives of the Cohasset High School Peer Leadership program helped Tarlaian conduct a discussion among the tables on one of the King's principles. Several peer leaders, who were trained by the Anti-Defamation League, circulated throughout the room to aid in the discussions.

State Representative Garrett Bradley said a few words on behalf of Governor Deval Patrick about how Dr. King's work is still not done.

Tarlaian said he has been asked to return to Cohasset in the spring with a colleague to conduct a more in-depth two-day training about Kingian nonviolence.

Betsy Connolly of Cohasset, a member of Saint Anthony's Parish and emcee for the Martin Luther King Jr. Day Breakfast, delivers a welcome to attendees and introduces the event's speaker.

Barbara Baumgarten and her daughters Clara (center) and Ellie start off the day with "Amazing Grace." Proceeds from the pancake breakfast will benefit the Pine Street Inn.

Kuolas, a full-time artist who lives in Cohasset, has extensive art teaching experience and enjoys working with kids, which made her a perfect fit for the program. While primarily a printmaker, specializing in collagraph and block printing, she often dabbles in other forms of art. A three-dimensional wire basket of her creation is currently on display the Fuller Museum of Art in Brockton.

The Art Center was a part of the reason she moved to Cohasset four years ago and she has enjoyed being a part of the strong artistic community it has. She got her first taste of art in a class similar to the one she now teaches, so she knows how important (and influential) an art experience at an early age can be.

Wearing an apron splattered with 30 years worth of colorful ink, Kuolas walked the class through her methods of creating a piece of print art.

"There is a lot of planning involved and thinking involved in making art," said Kuolas. She told the kids her number one rule in creating prints and art is knowing when to stop. She involved each member of the class in the process so each student got a chance to be a part of the art process.

She stresses along the way the importance of not wasting any of the materials from excess ink to paper. An environmentally aware artist, she makes her own paper and strives to reuse resources where she can. She uses prints that maybe didn't come out perfectly as inspiration for future work, she explains.

The program runs throughout the school year from mid-September to June, a total of 24 weeks, so being the Artist in Residence is a big commitment.

"I'm committed to teaching the class so I've worked it into my schedule," said Kuolas. She is not alone in her commitment to the program; three volunteers devote their time and skill each Wednesday morning.

"This program is only made possible by the volunteers," says Heather Collins the Art Center's director of community programs who oversees the program. Libby Allard and Sharon Daly, both Cohasset residents, are long-term volunteers with the program. Susan Walker of Scituate has joined the program as a volunteer this past fall.

Together, the volunteers help the children with the creative part of the program — making their own art piece to take home. Students are asked to create their own block print from foam core. Examples of African symbols, called Adinkra originating from Ghana, are discussed. Some students choose to emulate those symbols, while other create a symbol meaningful to them — a hockey stick, a heart, a star, or an initial. Using non-toxic paint, the symbols are transferred to construction paper.

One of the prints is used to fashion a classroom mural to be hung in the classroom, the other the kids can take home.

"I want the kids to come away with knowing art is something they can do," said Allard. At the end of the class, ideas to continue the art project at home are given to spark the kids' imagination and inherent artistic ability.

"We started the program basically because funding for arts in schools has gone down dramatically," said Allard, "if the kids don't have a good art teacher, kids can get turned off from art…here we've yet to have a class that's not crazy about the program."

Heather Collins,. The Artist in Residence program was started in 2004 in conjunction with Art Center's 50th anniversary as a way to expand its outreach program to provide new opportunities for learning about art to new populations of students in the region. It's offered free to schools across the region, all they have to pay for is the bus to get there.

"With this program we want show the best of what South Shore Art Center has to offer. It lets towns, schools, parents, teachers and kids we are a resource in the community," said Collins, "our asset is our artists and this program showcases that and all we have available."

The coordinators of the program have received many positive responses over the last few years, from teachers and students alike.

One student wrote this year with a message that speaks volumes about the Artist in Residence program, "The South Shore Art Center has opened the art in me."

And that's what it's all about.

While Sam says their family is atypical in having all family members participate in the sport, it just goes to show how versatile and welcoming the sport is. Currently, there are five different skill levels — from novice to professional — where one can compete and age groups defined by every five to 10 years. The sport is still dominated by males, but Trish says there is a growing number of females joining cycling and cyclocross. She plans on starting a team of women over 40 next season.

Cyclocross as a sport started in Europe as a way road cyclists could stay fit beyond the regular spring and summer season. Over time, cyclocross became an individual sport on its own merits. In the late seventies it started gaining popularity in the US, particularly in the Pacific Northwest and New England.

"It's the fastest growing aspect of cycling in terms of numbers in the US," says Trish. During the season, which runs roughly from late September to early February, there are competitions nearly every weekend in New England. Courses are as close as Canton and Plymouth.

The cyclocross bicycles are similar to racing bicycles: lightweight, narrow tires and drop handlebars. But, because of the varying conditions the tires typically are knobbier for increased traction and are equipped with a different brake system. The bikes need to be lightweight because during the race to get over a pair of 16-inch barriers or to quickly ascend a steep hill cyclists need to dismount his/her bike and carry it.

"From a kid's perspective, it's a mini adventure every time on the course," said Trish. Each fall, Nate sets up a shortened version of a cyclocross course to practice. He has a set of barriers, a section of grass (which is sometimes covered with snow or ice) and the driveway for pavement.

In a full-length cyclocross course, there are pit stops, similar to stock car racing, where cyclists can change bikes if the tires get too muddy or if there is a technical issue.

Many cyclists use cyclocross training and competition to extend their road cycling season and stay active during the long off-season. The varying types of terrain help cyclists improve their handling skills on the bike, says Sam. Both Nate and Sam compete in road cycling as well.

In addition to the athleticism and competition, the Morses enjoy the family atmosphere and community feel at the weekend events. Every weekend there at a different venue on a different course all over New England, but the same competitors are there with them.

"Families at cyclocross have become some of our dearest friends. It's a big community," says Trish. While on the racecourse Nate and his fellow competitors vie for top position but the minute its over the contention evaporates, says Trish.

The Morse family recently headed out to the cyclocross National Championships in Kansas City, Kansas where both Nate and Sam were competitors. An ice storm left the course a winter wonderland for spectators, but on the course the ice created varying conditions of deep, thick mud and slick ice. Internationally ranked cyclists competed on the same course as the Morses.

Cyclocross competitor Nate Morse, who recently celebrated his 13th birthday, leaps over a barrier that is part of a practice course in his backyard.

Nate points out that while at a professional football or baseball game, the players are kept at arms length, but on a cyclocross course there isn't a barrier or security team to prevent someone from approaching an professional cyclists. Young racers can go up to professional cyclists congratulate them on a great race and even ask for a few tips, says Nate.

In addition to the welcoming community, the sport is accessible because it involves a skill most already have —riding a bike, says Trish, and can be practiced anywhere at anytime. A little bit of training on different terrains and how to maneuver over the barriers, can lead to a rewarding experience in cyclocross.

But if jumping on a bike in 30 degree whether isn't your cup of tea, the cyclocross races is a exciting spectator sport. At larger venues, as many as 100 cyclists can be in one race. With little space — the course width is typically only four meters — competition can be fierce. The courses are designed so about three-quarters of the race can be seen from any one position.

"Of all the cycling disciplines, it's the most fun to watch," says Trish, "there's so much variety for the spectators and the riders."

Trying out a new path

Greenway project would link towns

By Tessa Fitzgerald
TFITZGER@CNC.COM

"Each of these towns has been working on this subject, but in isolation. This is a chance to bring them all together."

— Judeth Van Hamm,
a member of the greenway planning team

Imagine a walking and biking trail that connects Norwell's Norris Reservation to downtown Scituate, to the ocean in Hull and other outdoor areas in Hingham and Cohasset.

That concept could soon become a reality.

Three students from the Conway School of Landscape Design in Conway, Mass., will be working the towns to design the South Shore Greenway.

But before they begin, they want to hear input from residents who live in or drive to these towns everyday.

On Tuesday, Jan. 29, at 7 p.m., a public hearing will be held at the First Parish Unitarian-Universalist Church in Norwell. At the hearing, residents can offer their input in the form of what areas in these towns they would like to see connected to the greenway, why they love their towns and what makes the South Shore special. The meeting's in Norwell, but the event is planned for residents from all of the towns.

"Everyone is welcome," said Judeth Van Hamm, a member of the greenway planning team who lives in Hull.

"This is a chance for residents and officials and businesses to come out and say what's important to them," Van Hamm said.

Van Hamm said the concept is not totally new to her.

"We had a meeting a couple of years ago working on making some roads that connect Hull and Hingham safer for walking and bicycling," Van Hamm said. "At that meeting we started talking about connecting harbors on the South Shore."

So the towns of Cohasset and Scituate were included.

The concept of a bike-walk path is not new in any of these towns, though.

"Each of these towns has been working on this subject, but in isolation," Van Hamm said. "This is a chance to bring them all together."

Van Hamm was the person who made the initial contact with the Conway School. She had been working on a grant proposal for a different project and had seen the school represented at the Northeast Sustainable Energy tradeshow in Boston. She didn't get the grant for the other project, but the school did call to tell her some students had an opportunity to do a research project this winter.

The South Shore Greenway planning group, consisting of citizens from each of the towns, met about three weeks ago in Hull.

Norwell Town Planner Todd Thomas attended the meeting to see if he could get Norwell involved in the project. He said he would love to see the Norris Reservation connected to the pathway.

"It's a great site," Thomas said. "It's a wonderful amenity, not just for Norwell, but for the whole South Shore."

Thomas said the greenway would also give residents more transportation choices. If a person didn't want to drive their car into Boston, they could potentially ride their bike from Norwell to the Greenbush line in Scituate and take the train in. Or if somebody wanted to spend the day in one of the seashore towns, they could walk, jog or bike there on a safe pathway.

Thomas said students at the Conway School are going to put the greenway plan together pretty quickly, with another meeting to be held in March.

When the plans have been put together, the towns will have the option of applying for state and federal grants, or even individually voting to use money out of their community preservation funds to bring the greenway plans to life.

Andrew Weir, a student at the Conway School who will be working on this project, said the greenway would also be good for area wildlife, so animals aren't stuck on small patches of open land. They would also offer people alternative transportation.

"I really believe in making cities and landscape and suburbia better," Weir said. "I don't like all that sprawl and I don't like having to ride everywhere. We can make things better for people."

Weir said he and team members Michael Lance and Kathleen McCormick have been working to gather information on each of the towns. They have reviewed existing bike path plans and seen the land for themselves.

Weir said they are eager to hear ideas people have for this project.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Our planet

We continue to be impressed with those in Cohasset who have "gone public" with their efforts to encourage recycling, conservation and find new sources of energy.

JoAnn Mirise, who pens the column Toward a Sustainable Cohasset, has inspired us personally to use reusable bags instead of their paper or plastic counterparts at the supermarket and to return to drinking tap water and stop buying bottled water.

This week we are encouraged to learn that the Alternative Energy Committee, a town committee, has reached out to Sustainable Cohasset, a private group, to work together on energy-saving initiatives.

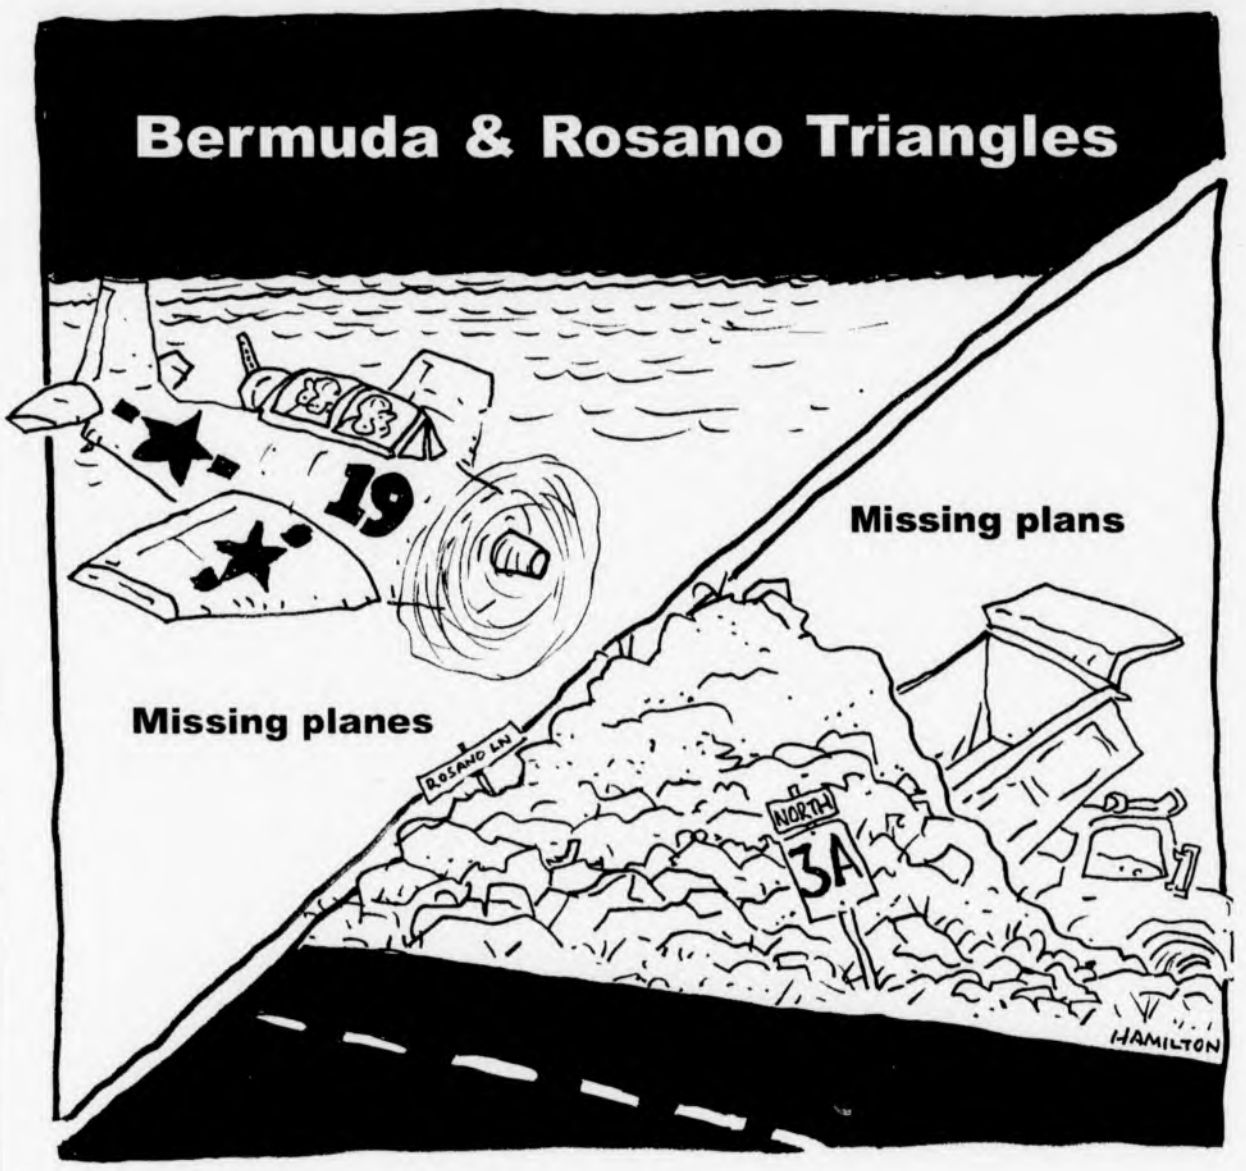
To help the town obtain grants and matching funds for initiatives such as solar panels on the library, the Alternative Energy Committee urges residents to sign up for National Grid's Clean Energy Choice Green Start program.

In terms of the "world picture" the steps proposed are small ones. However, if the enthusiasm and efforts in Cohasset are being repeated elsewhere – or other municipalities are inspired by our example – then those small steps can turn into major strides.

To help the town obtain grants and matching funds for initiatives such as solar panels on the library, the Alternative Energy Committee urges residents to sign up for National Grid's Clean Energy Choice Green Start program.

Signing up means electricity customers pay from $5 to $10 a month on their electric bill to support the development of renewable energy. Each additional household (Cohasset currently has 30 participating) that signs up helps earn matching grants for the town.

The AEC says if 240 households sign up by April 30, the town would be eligible for grants to install a solar array on the library's roof, reducing the library's electric bill.



Other proposed initiatives include a solar wall at the DPW building that would preheat air before it enters the building and wind turbines.

Plans are in the works to ask Town Meeting to support a funding article for the solar wall and another for a wind turbine bylaw. Both articles will be aired by the selectmen in the weeks ahead.

We also believe that taking better care of our planet is an issue that young people really care about and want to be involved in.

The Center for Student Coastal Research is a great example. Under the leadership of teacher Jack Buckley of Cohasset and other concerned citizens, the CSCR has puts its arms around the health of the harbor and other bodies of water.

With young, old and those in the middle all working together – Cohasset is truly a bright light in terms of its tangible efforts to make a difference in the environment and to enlighten more and more of us about how we can all be part of the solution and less a part of the problem.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dimly painted crosswalk

TO THE EDITOR:

A few days ago I participated in a bit of road rage in downtown Cohasset.

Proceeding eastward toward the harbor down Elm I was neatly cut off by a car emerging from Brook which had stopped there to allow a rather nice looking young lady to cross. Perturbed but not irked I climbed the rise to where a pedestrian was strolling across the street, cell phone in ear. Sleekily I allowed him to clear, parked, got out and retrieved my groceries and cane, which I had dropped.

I looked up and there in front of me stood the same man I had just seen crossing the street, who said, "I am a police officer and you have just violated the crosswalk and if you do so again I will arrest you."

Silently I acknowledged the officer's diligence for he had re-crossed the walk and also, I was dimly aware of the dimly painted crosswalk lines, a general problem I had previously discussed with town officials – and the Police Department.

Nevertheless I was wrong and said so – we exchanged names, pleasantries and departed, but did not shake hands because I had none to spare.

What, I thought, an interesting contretemps.

Parents' right to know

TO THE EDITOR:

If the Cohasset School Committee is not concerned about Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh's omission of her involvement in a federal lawsuit, I as a parent am. This is unacceptable and indicative of the failure to disclose material facts that Ms. Walsh has been alleged to have done in Middleboro. This is not something that the parents of Cohasset should be willing to tolerate.

Since the article in the Patriot Ledger ran about Ms. Walsh's involvement in the disaster in Middleboro and again this past week when a similar article ran in the Cohasset Mariner, there has been considerable discussion among parents in Cohasset about this situation. In the past three years there have been teachers in Cohasset that have been mysteriously dismissed from the school system without adequate explanation. Parents have the right to know the details of what is happening at our schools and not be left in the dark, as they were in Middleboro. The School Committee should not be blasé about a pattern of concealment of material facts. Our town officials should be more concerned with the safety of our children and a parent's right to know what the truth is in our schools.

Parents' rights group launched

TO THE EDITOR:

A group of Cohasset citizens have formed a parents' rights group.

The Parents Rights Defense (PRD) organization is committed to the protection of parents and children from educational institutions whose exercise of power denies parents' their human and constitutional rights.

The mission of PRD is to provide a powerful independent voice that acts as a check and balance to entrenched political and bureaucratic systems.

PRD will use its resources to challenge those bureaucracies that paralyze parents through threats, intimidation, coercion or legal action. PRD will represent threatened parents to bring about change using the court of public opinion, the ballot box and when necessary the courthouse. Parents and others, acting together can raise a voice that cannot be ignored or silenced through threat of retaliation.

Parents are invited to report issues to PRD in privacy to avoid any threat of retaliation to their children. PRD will examine each case and suggest a course of action. Action is taken only when parents agree. Interested parents and others may contact Louis S. Harvey at LouisHarvey@comcast.net.

PRD is funded by donations from parents and others concerned with the loss of rights suffered through excessive use of power by those whose purpose is to serve the public. Donations may remain anonymous and can be sent to:

POLITICAL NOTES

Karen Quigley makes it official

Karen Quigley recently returned her nomination papers for the Board of Selectmen with significantly more than the required amount of signatures. "I'm thrilled with the support for my candidacy so far," said Quigley. "It's coming from every part of town and all ages and interest groups."

In preparation for her run for selectman, Quigley is launching a "Listen and Learn" tour by attending meetings of the Board of Selectmen and other committees at Town Hall. "It's important to get to know the people who sit on the committees," she says, "and imperative to learn about the issues."

Quigley is best known as an environmentalist and town activist who believes in approaching issues "objectively and with logic and common sense."

Fixed-price contract for big project

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush — From time to time, we get reports of unusual things happening at some of our railroad crossings. If you happen to notice any action by the railroad equipment that doesn't seem normal or any persons who are in areas of the railroad where they shouldn't be, it is everyone's obligation to call 911 as quickly as you can. This is only common sense, but it could save a life.

Stuff about Cohasset Little Harbor Project — From time to time we'd like to include a bit about this humongous public works project. With the exception of the not too recent schools projects, this is the largest public works project to be undertaken in Town, totaling around $15 million. As we're sure you know it includes both sewer, water and storm drainage. We don't intend to duplicate the work of the Sewer Commissioners or the design engineering firms who already have an outreach program in place. We just hope to add a bit more understanding to the project and help explain why some things are the way they are.

As has been mentioned before, the way our Town is undertaking this project is really very smart. We are all used to seeing one project tear up the roads, do their stuff and repair the roads only to have another project come right behind them and tear up the whole shebang all over again. This time, all three Town-related utilities (sewer, water, and storm drainage) are being constructed in one project by one contractor. Sewer is the lead dog in this project with about 60 percent of the total work. Water has about 30 percent of the work, and storm drainage has just less than 10 percent. The cost benefits to the Town are great. The Town has only one set of contractor mobilization costs rather than three. (Mobilization costs are the costs that allow the contractor to bring his people and equipment into Town and prepare to work. These alone are typically in the range of 15 to 20 percent of the total cost.) And, using one machine to dig three sets of trenches at the same time is a real money saver. Thus, the time required for the construction for each of the projects can be seriously compressed by doing them together. And, with one contractor all three services; sewer, water and drainage get constructed in a much more coordinated fashion.

This project has been referred to by some, as Cohasset's Big Dig. Nothing could be further from the truth. This project is a fixed price contract. It was awarded to the qualified bidder with the best price. The Town does not pay any more if the contractor has a thousand people working or less with one person working. Of course, if they operate in either of these ways, the contractor won't make any money or won't meet the schedule. So it is in the contractor's best interests to employ only those labor resources that will get the job done on schedule. The only way this project can exceed the budget is if the scope of work changes. Then, each change, results in a negotiated increase or decrease in cost. So, the only thing our project has in common with the Big Dig is the temporary upset of the surrounding neighborhoods. As we have said before, construction is not a stealth activity.

COURTESY PHOTO

Ledge chomping on Rust Way.

This time, all three Town-related utilities (sewer, water, and storm drainage) are being constructed in one project by one contractor.

Someone asked, "Why are you digging so much?" Why not just put all three pipes into one trench. Clearly, that should be simple to do. Not so fast! There are rules and regulations to which we need to pay attention. For reasons of public health and safety, normally the pipes serving the water and sewer must be separated by a distance of 10 feet. The reason is simple. If either of the pipes should develop a leak, we must avoid cross contaminating the drinking water system or polluting the ground/surface water at all costs. Thus, the 10-foot rule. (Note, There are exceptions. For example, if the sewer pipe is encased in concrete, a horizontal separation of 3 feet is allowed.) But, at no time may the pipes be adjacent.

Different services need different pipe materials, different depths in the ground and different slopes to the pipes. Water is always pumped, so the slope of the pipes in not critical. But, some sewer lines may flow by gravity, so the slope of the pipes becomes important. Where gravity won't do the sewer job, pumps must be used and slope is not too important. Storm drains, however, are almost always gravity flow systems. The slope of the pipes is very important to direct the storm water to its destination. Each of these three systems uses different materials and sizes for their pipes based on the volume carried in the pipe and pressure in the pipe and other technical requirements. That's why you will see so many different sizes and colors of pipe near the construction sites.

There are often surprises. In a Town as old as Cohasset there are lots of systems that were placed underground a hundred years ago or more. Some of these were done privately. For a variety of reasons, these systems were never recorded for posterity. For example, on Jerusalem Road the project stumbled on an old, very well built, drainage system. The covers to some of the manholes were several feet below the road surface and were found pretty much by accident. These were probably put in to serve some of the grand estates that graced our shoreline in the late 1800's. The system we saw was fabricated from brick and really showed excellent masonry craftsmanship. Some of the manhole access points went 7 feet or so below the road surface. Presently engineers are trying to see if portions of these systems are suitable to be placed back into service somehow as a part of the new system.

So, you can see there are a lot of details involved in a project like this, and a lot of reasons why things are the way they are. We will continue to keep you posted as things progress.

To swear or not to swear

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where the city council in St. Charles, Missouri, a 62,304-folk suburb of St. Louis, is considering an ordinance that would ban swearing as well as table-dancing, drinking contests, and profane music in barrooms.

Councilor Richard Veit said he filed the measure after learning from his constituents that people who drink the stuff they serve in barrooms often misbehave and the cops need the ordinance to stop it.

His proposal would ban indecent, profane, or obscene language, songs, entertainment, and literature, which pretty much covers everything a guy would go into a barroom for, except, of course, the booze.

I don't know about drinking contests and profane music and I haven't been table-dancing since that time . . . but no one's interested in that . . but St. Charles may run into difficulties when they ban swearing.

It was about 15 years ago that our own neighbors, the city of Quincy, egged on by Mayor Jim Sheets, passed an ordinance that prohibited swearing in public.

"I come out of city hall after work every night and I have to listen to this profanity and vulgarity being screamed from one side of Hancock Street to the other," complained Mayor Jim, and the ordinance was born.

I don't know if the law is still on the books, but if it is, then it's widely ignored, as I can attest after visiting Quincy during a recent snow removal crisis — profanity and vulgarity are still being screamed from one side of Hancock Street to the other.

St. Charles's valiant attempt to clean up the English language also shows you how times have changed from the days when we kids used to look up swears in the dictionary in the Thayer library branch across Quincy Avenue from Fred Grant's Shell Station.

When the novel "Strange Fruit" was published, somehow word leaked down to us kids that the most dreaded of all the four-letter Anglo Saxon functional verbs appeared in print on one of the pages, and that page in the library's copy was almost worn out by teen and pre-teen curiosity.

There were sections of that book that most of us had stared at so much we could quote the key passages flawlessly.

If they had had a rating system in 1939 when the movie "Gone With the Wind" was released, it might have drawn an R rating simply because Rhett Butler, Clark Gable's character, told Scarlett, "Frankly, my dear, I don't give a damn!"

It's hard to believe 70 years later, but there actually were demands that such cussing had no place in a motion picture that might be seen by children. Of course, once they heard that, the kids just had to see the flick.

Now the word "damn" and even stronger language is a staple of the radio talk shows, and if you want to wallow in the strongest obscenities and cuss words of all, just tune in to one of the cable channels, not only after nine o'clock but any time of the day.

Except in St. Charles, Missouri, where soon it may not be safe to swear even in a barroom.

Girls may rule, but do boys really drool?

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

Gender-based personality differences don't occur naturally. Boys and girls are born with an equal distribution of talents, but cultural pressures force them down separate roads, with different opportunities requiring different skills and nurturing different interests, which reinforce existing cultural stereotypes, and around and around. Nobody's from Mars. Nobody's from Venus. Everybody just go back home to Earth and behave yourselves. There's nothing to see here.

That explanation seemed plausible to me in the heady enlightened days of college, and all the women I wanted to date firmly believed it, so who was I to argue? The fact that male and female roles had converged so dramatically during the 20th century was clear proof that our paths would soon merge together, and the concept of human predilections that were characteristically male or female would some day seem as quaint and out-of-date as religious wars or authoritarian Russian leaders.

Many years later I was still comfortable with the idea that boys and girls were essentially the same animal. Then I attended a poetry reading in my daughter's kindergarten class. All eight of the girls' poems were about either rainbows or princesses. Out of four boys, two had written about killer sharks attacking babies, and the other two poems were also good but too disturbing to describe here.

It got me to thinking. When I was seven, my friends and I spent every free minute playing a game called Kill the Guy with the Ball. It was actually more sophisticated than it sounds. What you did was, one Guy would pick up the Ball, and the rest would try to Kill him. We played this at recess, birthday parties, funerals for former Guys with the Ball, you name it.

There was never a scrum of girls across the field playing an equivalent game. Even today you would probably have to poll every girl in the state to find enough willing seven-year-olds to make up a decent round of Kill the Girl with the Ball. The female force we did have to contend with during second grade recess called themselves The Kissing Girls, whose M.O. was even more self-explanatory than that of the Guy with the Ball.

Now, I'm not interested in debating which group is smarter or even which game is better, the cool one designed to sustain and cause as many injuries as possible — maybe even a couple of spectacular deaths — or the lame one glorifying affection and love. The point is that in the end, to persist in denying that boys and girls are very different does a disservice to both, and especially to girls, because there really is so much they could learn from boys.

For example:

1) Absolutely any human activity can be made into a competition. As I was flipping channels the other day I stumbled across a barn full of men shearing sheep with a sense of urgency you normally associate with emergency c-sections. At first I thought it might be a variation on a game called Kill the Guy with the Sheep, which we used to play up in Topsfield while our sisters were at 4H meetings, but it turned out to be The Professional Sheep Shearing Championships. Few things say as much about the male approach to life than that title, except perhaps the Professional Emergency C-Section Championships, which sadly are no longer legal in this country.

2) Bullies are mean people you avoid, whereas Friends are a different group of nice people you hang out with. It seems girls are still unclear on that one. Also, people who are mean to you one minute and nice to you the next are part of a third group, called Psychos. Treat them like plague. If it turns out that everyone you know is either a Bully or a Psycho, it's time to lay low for a few years and get into cars.

3) Kill the Guy with the Bone should always be played with a bone, otherwise it gets too confusing.

I've come to believe most boys are born violent and crude, and only after decades of training are they fit to enter decent society. Meanwhile girls are too wrapped up in social complexities to enjoy their relationships. These things don't seem to change. Sometimes I worry that my three daughters are so innately different from boys that my descendants are doomed to repeat all the same misunderstandings and conflicts men and women have suffered through since time immemorial. Then I walk into the lavatory off the play room and find that three days ago the toilet plugged but no one bothered to tell me and they just kept using the toilet for all the things toilets are used for, and I think gosh darn it, maybe there's hope after all.

John Lengyel lives in Cohasset. He has a ball and most Friday evenings free if anyone is interested.

HEALTH NOTES

Not taking town health for 'grant'ed

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In a changing world, it's prudent to retain a certain agility in our perception of how things work. Take, for example public improvements. We have all recently been exposed to a downtown revitalization that began as a disaster in both appearance and fiscally. What finally appeared was by most measures, not bad. The way the town snatched victory from defeat was through change.

In addition to the Town manager and most Selectmen, we changed many of the systems previously being used. Typically, the way a public improvement works is: A need becomes so pressing it can no longer be ignored by anybody; the town votes to pay for a minimum necessary fix. The State or the Feds require environmental or health improvements which we can't pay for. To get money from the state to pay for such improvements, a town must play the grants game. It must find a grant that addresses the town's need, apply for and implement it. Generally such grants require proof that the need exists: an assessment; a scientific study and analysis, which no one has the staff or money to pay for. Fortunately, Cohasset has developed within its educational system a means for making such assessments. Over the past 5 years, Cohasset students, while learning, have added to the Town's knowledge of its environment enough scientific information in one form or another to enable the town to apply and obtain its own grants for nearly $1 million worth of infrastructure improvements. Much of such learning was done within the school system in public service classes as well as outside of school in publicly sponsored programs such as Boy and Girl Scouts and organizations like the Center for Student Coastal Research.

A good example of the joining of school with nonprofit is shown by the contribution of Chloe Koines, a high school senior, doing public service work for the Board of Health at the CSCR's open house last Monday. The event displayed results of studies by students supporting various environmental and ecological programs being managed by that organization, most of which were paid for by State grants.

According to Chloe: "A group of CSCR students work in association with the Board of Health in efforts to produce scientific data that was comparable to that of a professional laboratory. Each week, we collect samples from Bassing Beach, Cohasset Yacht Club, Little Harbor, Sandy Cove, Sandy Beach, and Black Rock Beach, which we then process and analyze." Her exhibit is now on display in the Town Hall next to the Nurse's office

Students do the collecting. The Board compares samples from the sites with results sent to a local certified lab and decides which beaches to close, etc. However we get samples from the students in many locations for which we are not required to take samples so we have a broader and more general picture of the health of our water bodies.

And now, the town is taking the process one logical step further: the Conservation Commission is applying to the Community Preservation Committee for a grant to improve "Ten locations within a quarter mile radius of Jacobs Meadow. Controls within the James Brook watershed are needed to reduce the impacts of stormwater pollution affecting James Brook, Jacobs Meadow, Cohasset Cove and Cohasset Harbor. Designs will promote catchment, treatment, filtration, storage, evaporation and detention of stormwater prior to discharge into the tributaries to Cohasset Cove."

Additional project funding has been requested from the Massachusetts Office of Coastal Zone Management's Coastal Pollutant Remediation Grant Program. Matching funds will come in part from work done by the town, CSCR, the Water, Sewer, School department and others as an aggregate statement of the value of permitted labor hours for those contributing to the project.

And so, the Town is changing the way we're doing things. Throughout the upheavals going on in sewer, water, harbor and other infrastructure improvement programs, for the first time ever, we're getting recognition and financial support we desperately need from all of those involved in the Town's efforts at improvement.

Full disclosure warranted

TO THE EDITOR:

Whoa! "Supt. Walsh named in federal lawsuit?" "Supt. Walsh" aka Cohasset Superintendent of Schools? This is big news. Much bigger than Home Field for this CMS/CHS parent. And unless I've been sleeping, which I openly admit to when it comes to some School Committee business, this is not "old news" – or at least not for parents concerned for the safety of their children in Cohasset Schools.

I trust that going forward, the School Committee will uphold its commitment to the community by disclosing fully, their understanding and prior knowledge (if any) of this serious allegation.

I trust, also, that the School Committee will honor its commitment to the safety of our students by respecting a parent's right-to-know and clearly communicating any, alleged or otherwise, inappropriate conduct by school officials, faculty or staff; past and present.

Feedback on wrestling coverage

TO THE EDITOR:

I had my first occasion to attend the Cohasset High School hosting of a 10-school, non-league Wrestling Tournament event a week ago last Saturday afternoon at Cohasset High School. It was amazing! Other schools included, as example, Milton, Hingham, Duxbury, Scituate, Rockland, Braintree, Marshfield, etc. About 250-plus student wrestlers engaged, usually three matches in progress at a time with excellent referees. Easy to view from the close stands. The team members from each school got to wrestle the team members, one-on-one, from all the other schools on a rotating basis. The fans, from all towns, were great – like being at a Patriots game. It was captivating! Each match consists of three 2-minute periods – intense, energy burning maneuvers until a winner is declared by a pinning or by points gained throughout by successful takedowns or escape from a takedown.

The stands were packed full – parents and other fans and students! Parking was plentiful. A wide spectrum of tasty food, hot and cold sandwiches, snacks, beverages, deserts, ice creams, etc. was available in the adjoining cafeteria, quite inexpensive, all home-prepared (thus tasty!) and served by parents of the Cohasset team. Banners everywhere. A true, organized, festive event, including a couple of co-ed matches!

This was wrestling in classic, amateur format. Not the bizarre, violent, rehearsed stuff one sees on TV. Sure – the Cohasset team was somewhat overmatched with some of the larger schools, but that's part of the "learning" value for team members participating. The Cohasset team is excellent and usually prevailed over school teams in its size class. The excellent coaching and sportsmanship the Cohasset members receive and exhibit was obvious. Sportsmanship prevailed throughout – class acts from all. Student wrestling – perhaps the oldest, pure sport in the history of mankind, carried on from ancient Greek and Romans. Caesar preferred that Brutus wrestled?

I was disappointed today (Friday, Jan. 18 issue) when I read the Mariner coverage of the above huge event. Four and a half pages of Cohasset school sports coverage – but I (finally) found the one small photo of the above event. I played a lot of sports, at all levels, growing up in Boston in high school and college and know first hand how welcome the Boston papers' coverage and photos were for the community, the teams and the athletes – especially for the scrapbook. Don't we all still have our scrapbooks? The Mariner, to its credit, always seeks feedback from its readers. Well, here you have it! This fine, well coached, Cohasset Wrestling Team, a perennial top team on the South Shore, merits more discovery, support and Mariner coverage, especially events such as above.

Concerned about Walsh case

TO THE EDITOR:

After reading your article about School Superintendent Denise Walsh being named in a federal lawsuit, I felt as though something was missing. In this case, our Superintendent is charged with being complicit in the rape of a student by failing to warn the public of a teacher who Walsh knew had a history of inappropriate contact with students.

The School Committee may not be concerned about this case, but I am. What concerns me is that regardless of the timeline of events and the details of the lawsuit, this is another illustration of poor judgment by Superintendent Walsh. Because the incident did occur four years ago, shortly before coming to Cohasset, the School Committee's view is that it is not affecting her performance here. It is nonetheless a case of poor judgment that appears to have been repeated in Cohasset in the recent Special Education (SPED) lawsuit against the Lewis family.

In the Special Education action, I am concerned about the quality of judgment in the decision to sue the Lewis family to force a near honor student back into Special Education, considering that he will be entering a private school next fall. This lawsuit was initiated to overturn the Bureau of Special Appeals' (BSEA) order that permitted the Lewises to remove their child from the SPED program. Superintendent Walsh made the judgment that court proceedings were prudent in spite of the BSEA's order.

For this, the taxpayers are now liable for unknown sums of money in legal expenses and lost time while at the same time the School Committee is contemplating a reduction in academic teaching staff. Where is the money coming from? It would seem from the classroom. Should we be prepared for School Committee talk of an override to cover these expenses?

In the Middleboro lawsuit, the Superintendent answered your inquiries by stating, "It's really old news, it happened four years ago," with no denial of the accusations. We are talking about a case involving the rape of a young boy by a man in a position of authority. I can think of a lot of ways to describe this case, but "old news" is not one of them. Has the School Committee's win in the Lewis case given such arrogance to the school administration that they have no compassion for the family of the raped boy? Yes, something is definitely missing.

Dismayed by Walsh report

TO THE EDITOR:

I was very dismayed to learn of the legal actions that are pending regarding Dr. Walsh. It seems to me that we shouldn't have to learn about this in the Mariner and that this issue should have been brought up during her interview for the position. Considering that there have been several teachers in the Cohasset School System that have mysteriously taken a "leave of absence" I am wondering whether a similar pattern of cover-up is happening here in town. Although obviously certain things happen that are not the fault of Dr Walsh, as we have learned from history many times the hiding of the facts is worse than the crime

What is even more dismaying are the comments by Chmn. Rick Flynn that "it's nothing that affects the town of Cohasset". It seems to me that Mr. Flynn is either completely naive or like Dr. Walsh is not telling the whole story.

Charity and the sewer project

TO THE EDITOR:

Kudos to reporter Nancy White for the excellently comprehensive article about Cohasset's largest project ever, connecting nearly 500 more homes to the sewage treatment system. How fortunate we are finally to be able to do it, after so many years of delay. Also fortunate is having a staging area adjacent to the work. It isn't a perfect site, but it is the only one available and sufficiently close to the work, and it sure beats using the streets to store materials, equipment, supervisor's trailers, etc.

How could anyone think that locating the staging area on the far side of 3A made sense? The result would have been scarce use of it; inevitably the interference with efficient work, and the safety issues with so much travel, would cause the streets to become the actual storage area. And how can anyone with common sense be charitable to the abutter who has taken legal action to make the staging area go away? But let's move on to the subject of charity.

It seems to be inherent in the American personality to be generous to charitable causes, and that is fortified by the bountiful nature of this fortunate continent, and by the virility of our industry.

But maybe we would be even more generous if we were more confident that our contributions were well spent, and that we were choosing the charities making most effective use of the donations. The financial reporting of charitable organizations is inconsistent, and often misleading and incomplete. The layman needs help from professionals well-versed and experienced in interpreting and questioning the financial reports.

The nonprofit American Institute of Philanthropy (P.O. Box 578460, Chicago IL 60657-8460) publishes a tri-annual Charity Rating Guide and Watchdog Report at no charge to its members (i.e. those who donate a few bucks to it).

It does not deal with the technical effectiveness with which organizations perform their stated mission; its focus is on percent of income spent on program services and on the fundraising money spent to raise each $100. It rates about 750 charities, and provides other useful information, leavened by a few examples of egregious behavior.

Some of its conclusions are surprising, and give reason to change one's mind about allotment of charitable donations. For example, not all organizations purporting to serve our veterans are equally worthy of our donations, at least based on financial effectiveness, including some of the best known.

Parents have a right to answers

COMMENTARY

HOWIE ALTHOLTZ

I read with concern, the recent article regarding Superintendent Walsh being named a defendant in a Federal lawsuit regarding conduct at her previous school system (Middleboro). That conduct is alleged to have put children in that school in danger and raised liability issues for that town. I am also concerned with some school committee members seeming inclination to minimize this disclosure, which connects directly to events now going on at our school. With student safety at issue, how could we not ask questions? These committee members must have not thought through the full impact for our community and children.

This is not by any stretch "old news". This is new information about an ongoing case, which at a minimum raises serious questions about Ms. Walsh's judgment and competence, what she did or didn't do in Middleboro, and its impact on those children and their community. More significantly, it should raise very serious concerns as to whether that same behaviors and policies, which may have contributed to the terrible consequences in Middleboro, are being repeated here in Cohasset.

As the committee is aware, there is evidence that similar decisions now being made regarding teachers in Cohasset, could pose similar risks for our children and potential liability for the town.

There are also ethical issues raised by Ms. Walsh's apparent failure to mention the ongoing lawsuit during recent negotiations and renewal of her contract, which directly bear on issues of integrity.

Protecting our school's image and good PR spin are not sufficient reasons to adopt a, "see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil" posture. It's time for some answers.

What isn't "old news," is the fact that in the last three years alone, at least three teachers were removed from teaching at Cohasset Middle/High, under very secret and suspicious circumstances.

About two years ago a teacher at the Middle/High school was quietly removed, mid-week in mid-term, without any real information to the community, parents or the children. There was widespread concern about his behavior toward students over an extended period of time, and some parents with "inside information," were already taking kids out of the class. Most parents never got the information they needed to protect their children, either while the teacher was still in class, or afterwards when he might still have had contact with unsuspecting children (like in the Middleboro case).

Last year a high school teacher was quietly ushered out of the school mid-week in mid-term without a word to parents, the community or the children. Instead parents were served a stew of misleading information and rumors. It was later disclosed that while reviewing tapes on a hidden video camera, school officials observed him doing something very concerning, purportedly on a computer. There may have been more. So concerning was the behavior in fact, that he was forced to leave very abruptly. An investigation was later commenced by the Department of Education. At the end of last year, a third teacher was reportedly engaged in conduct so concerning that he had an "observer" posted in his room and was asked not to return this year.

The facts alleged in the Middleboro case are that a teacher had been, "quietly let go" by the school system for certain undisclosed, inappropriate conduct in class, without any notice or information to the community or parents (Sound familiar?). Still in the community area, he apparently made contact with students who were not informed enough to be concerned, and unsuspecting parents who were kept in the dark by the school administration did not have the basic information they needed to protect their kids. It resulted in a child being raped.

When Cohasset school officials were asked to explain recent incidents and teacher disappearances at our schools, even the simplest of questions, as for example, whether a teacher would be returning next year or not?, were responded to with comments like, "I'm not at liberty", or "Please contact our lawyer"... What?

Secrecy like that just naturally breeds suspicion. And for good reason.

Parents shouldn't be deprived of basic information they need to protect their children, because a government bureaucrat decides they can't handle the truth.

There are ways to communicate the truth and facts, even while protecting whatever privacy interests there may or may not be. Why are we so afraid of offending the offenders?

If the administration is too squeamish to tell the truth in detail, how about simply saying, "There was a disagreement over appropriate classroom conduct and we felt it was mutually beneficial for him to leave"... Or, "we were concerned about non-compliance with certain standards of conduct and decide it was best to part ways".

There are a million ways to be truthful, as well as discreet. Just say something...anything, so parents could know there was some problem they need to be aware of, and prepared to protect their children accordingly.

Understand that in the long term, secrecy won't protect against lawsuits, as we see with the Middleboro case, it may in fact cause them. And kids may be harmed along the way

Maybe there were more questions some parents should have been asking about what happened in those Cohasset classrooms. How could they even know to ask?

Maybe some kids had unreported episodes, maybe they had trauma reflected in their conduct or grades, that their parents couldn't understand...but never knew the right questions to ask.

The school's concealment of this information from parents and the community is just plain wrong on every level.

Parents should decide what information they need to protect their children, not the government. Taxpayers and the public have a right to know what is going on at their schools.

With a recently renewed lucrative three-year contract just awarded to Ms. Walsh, (as reported by the Mariner, a salary higher than many adjacent towns with bigger student populations and better test scores), one would think allegations in an active federal lawsuit concerning possibly negligent conduct in a previous job, is something a job candidate should ethically disclose, which I'm told is not the case here. Once the board has such information, it is a very legitimate, even important, subject of inquiry. You can't just wish the whole thing away and continue with "happy talk." It directly bears on competence, integrity, school safety and liability issues for the town.

Why would we sweep such critical issues concerning our children's safety under the rug?

It also raises related questions concerning the hiring process. Are teachers being screened properly to begin with? And what information will be given to the next community where teachers go to. Will they just quietly move on to the next school district? What are those communities entitled to know?

I don't have the answers but I do know there are a lot of questions that those with the information need to start answering.

As a start, the school committee could please tell us what happened to those three teachers who went missing. Why did they leave so suddenly and secretly?

I'm told that when Dr. Walsh was directly asked about one or more of the teacher disappearances by a town official, her response was essentially, you don't want to know. Well actually Dr. Walsh, we do want to know, especially when it comes to the well being of our children.

I urge the school committee to put politics and personalities aside, and be forthcoming — not defensive. After all, this is nothing less than an issue of public safety for our children.

House bills address the issues

YOUR REP

REP. GARRETT J. BRADLEY

As we enter the new calendar year, and resume the second half of the legislative session, I am pleased to report that the House of Representatives has addressed several important issues. The following bills were passed by the House in calendar year 2007.

Group Insurance Commission for Municipal Employees: In acknowledgement that the skyrocketing cost of providing health insurance to municipal workers had become a drain on the coffers of cities and towns across the Commonwealth, the House passed legislation to allow municipal workers and retirees to opt into the Group Insurance Commission healthcare plan, which will yield millions of dollars in savings to municipalities that can be used to provide much-needed property tax reductions.

Pension Reserves Investment Trust for Municipal Employees: Maintaining its commitment to cities and towns throughout the Commonwealth, the House passed legislation to permit the state to take over poorly performing municipal pension systems, a measure that will provide significant savings to municipalities and help provide further property tax relief.

Green Communities Act of 2007: The House unanimously approved bold energy reform legislation to promote the use of cleaner, renewable energy in Massachusetts. The bill establishes energy goals for the Commonwealth and acts to implement those goals through state-wide clean energy initiatives and reforms. The bill provides incentives to individuals, business owners and municipalities to invest in energy-saving technologies and aims to reduce energy consumption at the state level.

Liheap Fuel Assistance Appropriation: The House acted to avert a home heating crisis by unanimously approving $15 million in emergency funding to help more than 100,000 elderly residents and low income families stay warm this winter.

Child Abuse And Neglect Legislation: A bold reform to the state's social service network that toughens laws meant to protect the state's most vulnerable children, creates a new cabinet secretary dedicated solely to child welfare, establishes minimum educational requirements for social workers and their supervisors, and orders training of mandatory reporters and increase criminal penalties.

Film Tax Credits: To increase revenue and spur job growth in the Commonwealth, the House passed legislation to provide the burgeoning Massachusetts movie industry with incentives to film here through meaningful tax credits. The impact was immediate, with "The Pink Panther 2" moving its central location to Boston to take advantage of the credits.

Identity Theft: To protect Massachusetts residents from the growing problem of identity theft, the House passed comprehensive legislation to notify the public of data breaches, establish security freezes of accounts subject to identity theft and set standards for disposal of records containing personal data.

Baby Safe Haven Law: Makes permanent legislation originally passed in fiscal 2004 that provides a safe alternative for parents who might otherwise abandon their babies to surrender their newborns, 7 days of age or younger, to appropriate personnel at hospitals, police departments or manned fire stations.

Expanded Access to Birth Certificates of Adoptees: In an effort to simplify the process of obtaining their birth certificates, the House passed legislation to allow adoptees, 33 years or older, to access their birth certificates without a court order.

Increased Benefits to the Families of Police and Firefighters: In the immediate wake of the tragic on-duty deaths of two Boston firefighters, the House approved a bill authorizing municipalities to raise funeral expense reimbursements to families of firefighters and police officers killed in the line of duty from $5,000 to $15,000.

Fiscal 2008 Supplemental Budget: The House passed a $278.7 million supplemental budget that closed the books on fiscal 2007 and provided approximately $100 million for key economic development initiatives to stimulate emerging industries such as clean energy development and support growth industries such as life sciences.

Aid To Commercial Fishing Sector: The House voted to provide financial support to the commercial fishing industry in Massachusetts through an appropriation of no less than $500,000.

Tidelands/Chapter 91: The House overwhelmingly passed legislation to ensure a new, public-driven review process for large-scale projects being built on the Commonwealth's many tidelands.

Property Tax Classification: The House acted to reinstate the current property tax rate for businesses at 175 percent of residential rates in a further effort to help stem the rising tide of residential property tax rates.

Ticket Re-Sale Legislation: The House overwhelmingly passed legislation designed to simplify existing laws on the resale of sports, concert and other event tickets while giving broad new protections to consumers victimized by counterfeiters and frauds.

Mortgage Foreclosure Relief: In the midst of a national and statewide mortgage foreclosure crisis, the House passed bold new legislation to help stem the number of mortgage foreclosures by encouraging banks to help borrowers, providing a new three-month window to cure defaults and mandating tough new licensing standards for mortgage loan originators.

Child Abuse and Neglect Legislation: Acting to toughen the laws meant to protect our most vulnerable children from abuse and neglect, the House passed legislation to create a new cabinet secretary dedicated solely to child welfare, establish minimum educational requirements for social workers and their supervisors, and order training of mandatory reporters and increase criminal penalties.

Electronic Health Records for Health and Human Services: To promote a standard and up-to-date system of health records for those enrolled in state health and human service programs, the House passed a bill that would establish a task force to create electronic health records for these individuals.

Protecting Patient Confidentiality: In order to provide clients of licensed mental health counselors with the same right to confidentiality as clients of psychiatrists, social workers and psychologists, the House passed legislation to protect confidential communications in certain legal proceedings between clients and counselor.

Labor Reorganization Bill: In order to increase efficiency among state agencies, the House approved Gov. Patrick's reorganization of the Labor and Workforce Development secretariat.

Darfur Divestment: In an effort to help weaken the government-sanctioned genocide occurring in Darfur, the House voted to divest the state's employee pension funds from companies providing financial support to the Sudanese government.

School Building Assistance: In its three-year history, the MSBA has successfully contained the Commonwealth's unsustainable financial liability under the former program for 1,150 local school construction projects. In July, the Board of the Authority approved the most sweeping revisions to regulations in 60 years and improved the way local school construction is funded. These revised regulations combined with sound fiscal management have allowed the MSBA to reopen a sustainable, reformed grant program this year.

Recently, Treasurer Cahill announced that the Massachusetts School Building Authority had granted 83 new projects including one in the town of Hingham.

The Legislature has many issues deal with in the coming months and your thoughts and comments are always helpful. I look forward to hearing from you.

Garrett J. Bradley is the state Representative for the Third Plymouth District that includes Hingham, Cohasset, Hull and part of Scituate.

Absentee ballots available for Presidential Primary

Absentee ballots for the Presidential Primary on Feb. 5 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon, on Monday, Feb. 4, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. People who will be in town on Election Day and are able to come to the polls should vote in person. Residents may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Green-Rainbow, or Working Families, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. If a voter is Un-enrolled (Independent) he/she needs to choose a ballot and will remain Un-enrolled after the primary.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Feb. 5 to be counted.

The town will be using the Accu-Vote optical scan system. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of one's choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

Residents who are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast a vote at the polling place, may file a letter from a physician with the Town Clerk, stating that they are permanently unable to cast their vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for the resident to sign and return will be mailed to them by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

The demand for blood products is increasing due to the uncertainty of the times in which we live, requiring a new commitment to maintain a 5-to-10-day community blood supply. The Hull Knights of Columbus and the American Red Cross are teaming up to help ensure that a safe and adequate blood supply is available when needed.

A blood drive will be held from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 3, at Memorial Middle School, 81 Central Ave., Hull. It only takes about an hour and one small pinch to become a hero to someone in need. Anyone 17 years or older, weighing 110 pounds or more, and in good health may be eligible to donate blood. For more information on donating blood, call 800-448-3543 or visit www.newenglandblood.org.

Girls in first

The Cohasset High girls basketball team qualified for the Division 4 South sectional with a, 58-24, win over Cape Cod Regional Tech, Wednesday night. Carli Haggerty and Tori Lehr each had nine points. Rachel Fredey and Isabelle Franklin got some solid minutes in the game.

Cohasset is 10-2 overall, 8-1 in the South Shore League, good enough for first place. The Skippers took the top spot in the league with the Norwell win against Carver, Tuesday.

Cohasset defeated Abington, 40-27, Tuesday avenging its only league loss of the year.

Tori Lehr led with 11 points, Sammi Lehr added 10 and Samantha Crough chipped in with nine points. Carly Salerno, Kayla Farren and Meredith Kelly dominated on defense and were a big reason the Green Wave only scored 27 points in the game.

Carli Haggerty had 10 rebounds in the game.

The first place Skippers play at home January 25 against Carver. Tip-off is 6:30 p.m.

Sammi Lehr is under a lot of pressure from the Green Wave. The girls are alone in first place after Norwell defeated Carver, Tuesday night.

Change up

Top two lines look tip-top with Doonan's return

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Chemistry and hockey go hand in hand like February and pond skating. When Cohasset High sophomore Brendan Doonan went down with a groin injury during warm-ups a few ago, linemates, Pat Doonan and Charlie Czerkawski were without their third wheel.

In comes Paul Pozniak and things start to click. Over three games that powerful line scores 11-of-13 goals. Doonan comes back but Pozzy has been very effective on the top line so Skippers coach Bob Walsh sticks him with the Goetz brothers, Alex and Anders, on the second line.

It's a match made in hockey.

"We flipped the guys and that second line produced big," Walsh said. "That line explodes with Doonan and now we have two lines that can put the puck in the net."

Walsh notes that both lines were producing OK, but since the switch they have done much better. Take the last two games, Harwich and Carver, both Cohasset wins. The Skippers are now 7-3-1 overall, (6-1 in the South Shore League, good for second place behind Norwell).

The Skippers knocked off Harwich, 8-6, Saturday, Jan. 19. Doonan returned and scored one goal and handed out three assists. Anders Goetz got his first hat trick, and the eventual game-winning goal. Alex Goetz scored an empty netter and added three assist of his own.

Talk about production from your second line.

"I talked to Brendan and I said 'I think you are the missing link on that line,' they clicked and played off each other, it was great," Walsh said.

As for the top line, they played outstanding as usual, with Pat Doonan, Czerkawski and Pozniak combing for two goals and four assists. Ian Lyster scored and Frank Wheelwright and Conor Queenan both contributed in the win.

"This game pretty much started out as expected but from my perspective, it didn't finish in the manner I thought it would," Walsh said. "I give a tremendous amount of credit to Harwich. They're a good team with a short bench, (only 12

Skippers hit the mats

Wrestlers in league title hunt; ready for sectionals

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

In the life of a wrestling season the wins and losses aren't as important as first glance may indicate. That's why the 5-13 overall mark for the Cohasset High boys wrestling team is a bit deceiving. The Skippers still have a very good shot at winning the May Shore League title.

At 3-0 in the MSL, and with a big match against Tri-County (Tuesday, Feb. 5) most likely the decider there is plenty of important wrestling ahead for Cohasset. Instead of needing to be .500 or better overall to qualify as a team for the tournament, all of the individual scores will be added up during sectionals this year and a team score will be given. The top four teams make the tournament.

That's why Saturday's quad meet against Durfee, Wayland and Whitman-Hanson doesn't sting all that bad. Cohasset lost, 42-36, to Durfee; 50-6, against Wayland and, 39-33, to Whitman-Hanson.

"It absolutely doesn't hurt," Cohasset wrestling coach Torin Sweeney said. "It doesn't hurt to have a good non-league schedule, we will show our mettle in the sectionals."

Stephen Hurlbut won all three of his matches over the weekend and freshman Thomas Flibotte was an "eyelash" away from winning all three of his, going 2-1. Another freshman, Alex Kinnealey (189 pounds) is contributing and playing an important role.

"He's doing a great job at that weight class for such a young kid," Sweeney said.

Injuries have hurt Cohasset. Mike Froio and Nick Secatore have seen limited action lately and they have been sorely missed, especially during the Cohasset Wrestling Tournament held Jan. 12.

Down the stretch they come

Skippers 6-6 heading into Carver game

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High boys basketball team lost to Abington, 64-51, at home Tuesday night. Pat McCarthy led the Skippers with 20 points in the game; Dan Martin added 15 points and 12 rebounds and Robert Jones chipped in with nine points. The Skippers are now 6-6 overall, 2-4 in the South Shore League and need some big wins down the stretch if they want to qualify for the Division 4 South sectionals.

"We came out slow in the first half and fell behind by a considerable amount," Cohasset coach Dorian Bryant noted about the Abington game. "The kids worked really hard to cut the lead to four in the fourth quarter but we have to do a better job of staying close."

The boys defeated East Bridgewater, Friday night, 78-61. Martin continued his outstanding play, recording his second straight triple double with 20 points, 12 rebounds and 11 blocks. The big guy has been, ah huge, for Cohasset.

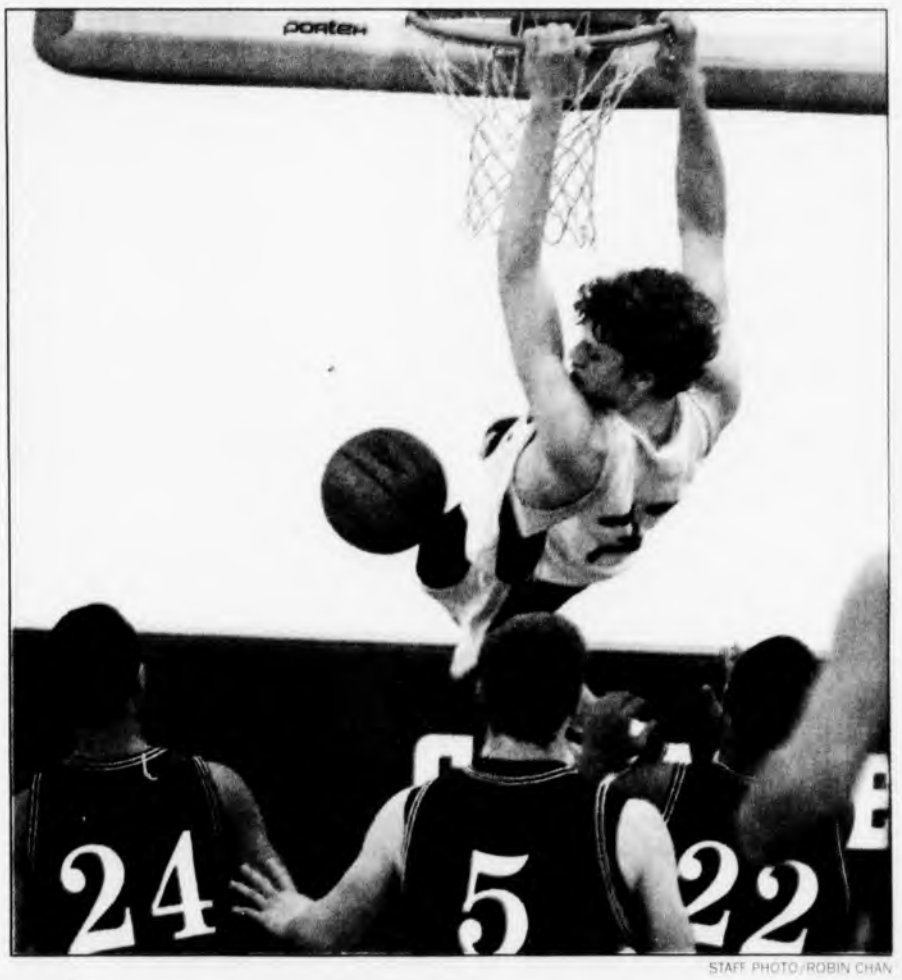
"Right now he is being really aggressive on offense," Bryant said. "He has also found his touch, it's not often you find a guy with his size that can hit a 10- or 12-foot jump shot and our offense is geared toward that."

With big games against Carver, Hull and Norwell on the horizon, the Skippers are going to have to put their best foot forward if they want to make the tournament.

If Martin is Taylor Made for the Skippers offense then the same goes for the defense where the junior center dominates the defensive boards and continues to record a silly number of blocks per game.

"He is blocking shots well," Bryant said. "We are teaching him to stay down on the initial move and then go up on the second, he is pretty good at timing and continues to rebound well."

Marcus Charles added 16 points against the Vikings with Gordon Smith (15 points) and McCarthy (10) both playing well in the win.



With big games against Carver, Hull and Norwell on the horizon, the Skippers are going to have to put their best foot forward if they want to make the tournament.

"As always you got to win," Bryant said with a laugh when asked what his team needed to do to get into the tourney. "Every opponent we have now is tough. We have to take care of things in practice, rebounding, defense, and free throw shooting. We are playing better as a team and hopefully what we do in practice will translate in the games."

Having a freshman point guard doesn't worry Bryant.

"The backcourt is playing really solid," he said. "Robert Jones is really steady and I am just impressed with him as a freshman point guard. Even when he struggles a little bit he is playing well."

All-Scholastic boys soccer team

Cohasset's Roth, Grimm among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top public school boys soccer athletes for this honor.

This is the Community Newspaper Company boys soccer squad comprised of athletes from Taunton, Lakeville Raynham, Randolph, Avon, Hanson, Whitman, Hanover, Marshfield, Weymouth, Braintree, Plymouth, West Bridgewater, East Bridgewater, Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, Abington, Rockland, Halifax, Plympton, Easton, Pembroke, Kingston, Holbrook, Carver, Cohasset, Duxbury, Norton and Mansfield. This is an abridged version of the team. For a complete list visit www.cohassetmariner.com

Sam Roth – Senior
Midfielder – Cohasset

Roth was one of the better scorers in the South Shore League…The South Shore League All-Star scored 13 goals and had 18 assists for the Skippers…Led Cohasset into the state tournament and spearheaded the Skippers offense from the midfield position.

Kereith Pinnock – Senior (Capt.)
Forward – Carver

The speedy forward ended his high school soccer career by helping the Crusaders to their second South Shore League title in four seasons…Despite being the player every team wanted to stop, the three-time South Shore League All-Star selection still managed to score 58 goals and assist on 17 others during his career.

Jared Spicer – Junior
Midfielder – Carver

Spicer was one of Carver's top offensive threats, playing a part in many goals this season…He closed out the season with nine goals and 11 assists…The three-year starter helped Carver to a perfect regular season and the South Shore League title.

Cory Hendrickson – Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder – Duxbury

An All-State All-Star this season, Hendrickson was ranked by Division 2 coaches as the top player in the Patriot League this past fall…A skilled midfielder, the flow of the game was controlled by Hendrickson, who led the Dragons to a share of the Patriot League Keenan title with a 7-2-2 mark…Also added six points with three goals, three assists…Hopes to continue his soccer career in college.

Dan Sangster – Sophomore Forward – Duxbury

Talk about a breakout season…Sangster was named an Eastern Mass. All-star in his first varsity year, leading the Dragons with 20 points on 10 goals, 10 assists…Had a stellar game against rival Hingham, tallying two goals, one assist in a 3-1 win, helping Duxbury lock up a share of the Patriot League Keenan title (7-2-2)…Also plays hockey at Duxbury High and plans to continue his soccer career in college someday.

James Adams – Senior Forward – East Bridgewater

Finished second in scoring on the team with six goals and four assists this season…Scored two goals in a season-defining victory over Rockland in September…The Vikings hadn't beaten Rockland in seven years… Scored the clinching goal in East Bridgewater's 2-0 shutout of Pembroke in the tournament quarterfinals playing as the Vikings only forward because injuries had forced head coach Jeff Driscoll to move everybody else back…A South Shore League All-Star this year.

Nicholas Clark – Senior (Capt.)
Goalie – East Bridgewater

Clark led East Bridgewater to the Division 3 South semifinals…Pitched 11 shutouts this season to lead the South Shore League…Allowed more than one goal only once in 18 regular season games…Finished the season with a sparkling 0.28 goals against average…Shut out Pembroke, 2-0, in the tournament quarterfinals…A South Shore League All-Star in '06 and '07.

Greg Giguere – Senior
Striker – East Bridgewater

Senior striker led the Vikings in scoring this season with 15 goals and seven assists…A three-year starter, Giguere wrapped up his career with 27 goals and 13 assists…Scored winning goal in double-overtime in East Bridgewater's 2-1opening round win over Cardinal Spellman…A South Shore League All-Star this season.

Jake Smock – Senior (Capt.)
Goalie – Hanover

A two-year starter in the net for the Indians, Smock was about as solid as it gets…The senior posted 12 shutouts this season, perhaps his biggest coming in a late-season 0-0 draw with Pembroke, with whom Hanover shared the Patriot League Fisher Division title (8-1-2)…Finished the fall with a stellar 0.81 goals against average…Also plays lacrosse at Hanover High and hopes to attend the University of Vermont next fall.

Charlie Wasson – Senior (Capt.)
Defense – Hingham

This talented player was an Eastern Mass. All-Star for the rebuilding Harbormen squad, which still qualified for the Division 2 postseason with a 6-6-6 mark…On a team which struggled to score at times, Wasson continually kept his squad in games this past fall with his strong play…Was an essential part of a defense that shutout five opponents and was edged in several contests by a lone goal…Also played a role in Hingham's previous two seasons, reaching the Division 2 South finals two years in a row.

Robbie Canning – Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder – Marshfield

Blistering speed and toughness made this flashy midfielder a huge asset for the Atlantic Coast League North Division champion Rams (10-0-3)…Canning was among the leading scorers on the Marshfield team this season and got the squad going in its Division 1 quarterfinal tourney game against Mansfield with a goal…Later, he had to leave the game after taking a hard hit and sat out the remainder of the tournament, where the Rams reached the semifinals.

Ryan Fischer – Senior (Capt.)
Forward – Marshfield

A dynamic player at midfield/forward whose skills are uncompromised, Fisher earned All-State All-Star honors this past fall…Led his team and was second in the Atlantic Coast League in scoring with 23 points on 11 goals, 12 assists…Paced the Rams to an Atlantic Coast League North Division title (10-0-3) and appearance in the Division 1 South semifinals…Also a hockey player at Marshfield High, Fisher plans continue his soccer career in college.

Colin Henry – Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder – Norwell

It's hard to encapsulate this kid's career as a Clipper…A two-time South Shore League Most Valuable Player, finished his career with 68 goals and 53 assists…All State selection and Eastern Mass. All-Star the last two seasons…Led the team with 21 goals and 15 assists this season, leading the Clippers back into the tournament…"Colin is probably the best all around player I've ever had the pleasure to coach," Norwell coach Jack Browne said…Plans to play soccer at Boston University next year.

Mike McCarthy – Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder – Norwell

One of the most well-rounded players on the South Shore, McCarthy was a four year varsity player…Named to the South Shore League All-Star team, scored 10 goals and had seven assists this season…"Mikey was just such a huge part of our overall game at both ends of the field," Norwell coach Jack Browne said. Plans on playing soccer in college next year.

Justin LaBonte – Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder – Pembroke

Led the Titans to the Division 3 South Sectional final with a team high 10 goals and 11 assists…A two-time Patriot League All-Star, finished his career with 25 goals and 18 assists…Team captain both junior and senior year and named to the Eastern Mass. All-Star team.

Joe Bohenek – Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder – Rockland

This speedy midfield/defender was very tough to contain, often getting offensive plays going from the back for the tough-luck Bulldogs (4-13-1)…A three-year starter and two-year Patriot League All-Star, Bohenek was a key part of a Rockland squad that was in every game it played, with five losses by one goal…Also plays basketball and runs outdoor track at Rockland High.

Tucker Fairbanks – Junior
Midfielder – Silver Lake

Fairbanks will be one of the key components next fall when the Lakers set out to defend their Patriot League title…The Patriot League All-Star used his speed to be a force on both ends of the soccer field.

Adam Smith – Senior Forward – Silver Lake

When the Lakers needed a goal this season, more often than not Smith was right there to find the back of the net…The first-time Patriot League All-Star led the league with 15 goals…He closed out his high school soccer career with 23 goals and one assist.

Skippers hit the mats

FROM SKIPPERS, PAGE 17

The Skippers placed sixth out of 10 teams. Hurlbut, David Toomey and Jack Murphy recorded third place finishes. Ross Collins-Wooley took fourth.

"It's a great tournament," Sweeney said, the tourney is now in its 17th year. "The young guys got to see a lot of good wrestling and that was important. We are so young and with the injuries that we have guys are learning everyday."

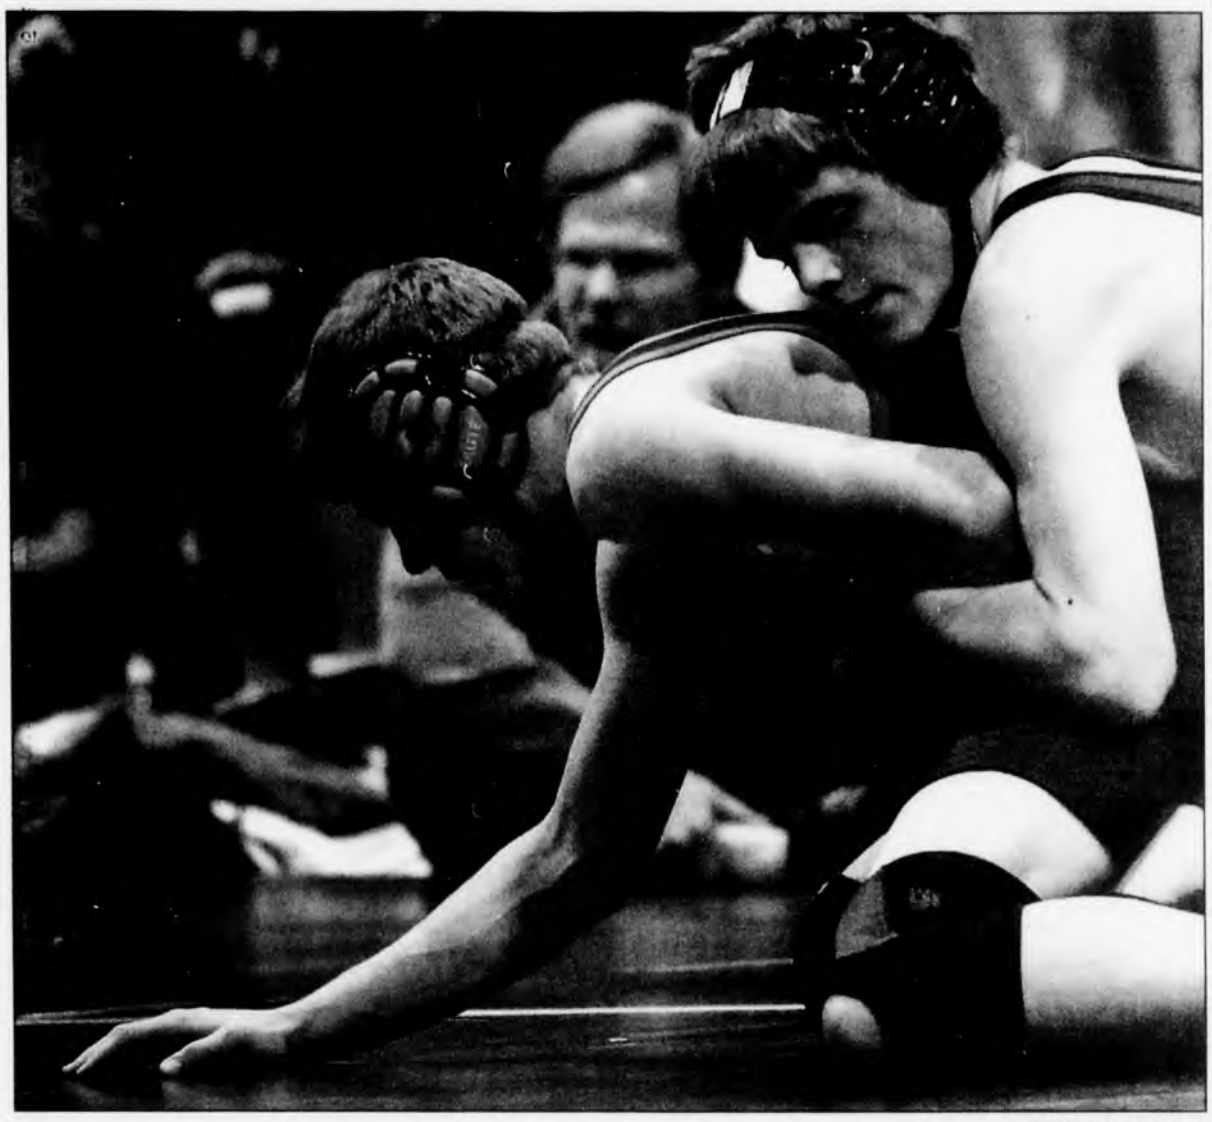
Cohasset has won the tournament a number of times over the years and should be favorites down the road when some of the youngsters from this year's team get more experienced. Cohasset only has two seniors (Hurlbut and Secatore).

Cohasset vs. Carver, Jan. 16

The Skippers defeated the Crusaders after trailing, 24-6, at one point. Andrew Littauer, David Toomey, Jake Wheelwright and Stephen Hurlbut all won by pin. Hurlbut's pin at 215 pounds clinched the victory.

"He's having a great season," Sweeney said about his senior captain who is 20-2 through this past weekend. He also has 17 pins on the year.

"The pins have been great," Sweeney said. "You don't want to count on them but looking at a match he's a guy that is going to get you six points. The whole match starts with him."



Cohasset vs. Norwell; Jan. 9

The Skippers clinched a valiant comeback beating the Clippers, 42-36. They trailed, 24-9, when Littauer, Toomey, Wheelwright, Collins-Wooley and Froio all won their matches by pin. Flibotte got his first varsity win in this one, but it was Hurlbut who, as usual, had the game-winning pin.

"That was a big league match," Sweeney said. "They (Norwell) are really coming along."

Up next

Cohasset wrestled Southeastern Regional earlier this week (Wednesday, Jan. 23) after the Mariner went to press. They will wrestle at Marshfield today (Friday, Jan. 25) at 4 p.m.

Cohasset's Andrew Littauer (140 lbs) has a hold of his Middleboro opponent during his first round win in the Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tournament. Littauer and the rest of the wrestlers have been busy of late and are 3-0 in the May Shore League, through this weekend.

skaters and two goalies).

"They poured it on in the third period, out worked us and took advantage of a number of mistakes we made in a number of areas," Walsh said. "As a result, we took four penalties, making us shorthanded for six of the 15 minute period. However, we were fortunate enough to come away with the win."

Cohasset led by as much as, 7-4, before Harwich crept back into the game.

Wednesday night the Skippers beat Carver, 8-4. The game was closer than the final score indicated. Cohasset led, 2-1, after one period and, 4-3, after two periods.

Anders Goetz scored on a penalty shot to get things started in the third period. He finished the game with one goal and three assists. Alex Goetz recorded a hat trick, including two third period goals. Czerkawski finished with two goals.

Pat Doonan (20) points and Czerkawski (18) were leading the team in scoring through the Harwich game (Carver stats not included).

Cohasset outshot Carver 39-25 in the win. They play Saturday night, Jan. 26, against Abington at the Rockland Ice Rink. The puck drops at 4:30 p.m.

Rock the night away

Come dance the night away to the classic rock sounds of the "GR8FLS" (formerly known as the Greatful Dads) at the beautiful Red Lion Inn Barn, February 1. The event benefits the Cohasset Hockey team and promises to be a rockin' time for everyone.

If you didn't make it last year, don't miss it this year. It's a great way to shake off the doldrums of winter and have a fun night out with friends in Cohasset. Here are the details, February 1, 8:00 p.m. to midnight. Classic and current rock provided by the "GR8FLS." Tickets are $20, available at the door or through any hockey team member or parent. Hors D'Oeurves and cash bar, so join the Cohasset Hockey Boosters who truly know how to put the "fun" back in fundraising and "come on down" to the Red Lion Inn February 1!

Hoop team wins three out of four

The Cohasset sixth grade travel basketball team posted three victories out of their last four Patriot League contests. The boys in blue continue to improve as the season takes shape and the competition gets stronger. This well coached team is developing its skills with improved shooting and great defense, including tight press coverage and good pass blocking; overall good team execution of plays that are drilled during weekly practices. This team sees production from every position, which is evident with scoring seen across the board. As the team approaches midseason, the competition looks to pick-up a notch, as the boys will face teams sitting high in the standings in the upcoming weeks of play.

The setting for Saturday night's contest against Silver Lake could have fooled most Hollywood producers for the set on Hoosiers…dim lights…seasoned court…noisy rims…good old fashioned round ball charm! Silver Lake came to play, but Cohasset was up for the challenge. Timmy Cavanaro started the scoring for Cohasset with a nice 12-foot jumper to get things going. Cavanaro finished the night with a pair of baskets and an all-around great effort. Henry Brown scored four himself and played great defense, he was a force all game. Brendan O'Connell directed things from the point draining five, including one big-timer from a wood-grain away from three-point land. Jack Conte drained a clean swish late in the game to keep things close. Rocco Laugelle, Jack Stanganelli and Mark Brown contributed with a bucket each. Connor Green was a beast on the boards, logging four points while doing a nice job maintaining possession.

But this one was back and forth from the get go, and Silver Lake battled to the end, including taking the lead with seconds remaining before Chris "Hoops" Haggerty rose to the occasion with a sweet looper through the rickety rim to knot it up with seconds left. Onto overtime, which became "Joe Buckley" time. In fact this game was just about all Joe B's tremendous effort. Buckley led the team in scoring with 11 points, including a way too dramatic finishing bucket to put this one away in double overtime. What a finish!

Hanson traveled to Cohasset's home court Sunday afternoon to play a close contest that would test Cohasset's patience on defense, as Hanson had some good shooters and a tenacious point guard that fought hard all game. This game was another example of how Cohasset continues to get production across the board from every position. Eleven players posted numbers in the scoring column, indicating a very well balanced attack. Doug Fitzgerald, Zach Coggins and Jack Conte all continue to handle the ball well at guard and create multiple scoring chances. Brendan O'Connell and Rocco Laugelle played terrific on both sides of the ball. Big men Mark Rattenbury and Mark Brown put up some big numbers all game to lead their team to a 34-20 victory.

Saturday afternoon Pembroke hosted Cohasset in a game that played a lot closer than the final score indicated. Cohasset prevailed 34-15 in the end, but the halftime score of 12-8 was more indicative of the close contest through midway of the second half. Overall, Cohasset played another well-balanced effort receiving scoring from nine out of 11 players and a solid effort from everyone on the floor. Jack Stanganelli played a wonderful game at the forward position with many scoring chances, great defense, good passing and great hustle. Laugelle and Rattenbury led the team in scoring. Mark McKenna and Brendan O'Connell each scored four and played solid from the guard position. Doug Fitzgerald, Chris Haggerty and Timmy Cavanaro all contributed with points and strong play. Jack Conte displayed great ball control and disrupted Pembroke's rhythm with good defense. A well-played contest by the visiting team to post three wins in a row.

The last of the four-game stretch was at home against the second place team from Whitman that takes no prisoners. These boys mean business. This was a good experience for Cohasset to see how a bigger town that produces bigger talent plays bigger and better. Whitman came out firing and never looked back. Cohasset held on and fought hard for the entire game, but in the end fell, 39-21, for the first time in four games. A great run that hopes to continue as the season grows old with experience.

Senior leadership from David Snowdale continues to be, and will be relied upon if Cohasset wants to be successful from here on out.

"He has been excellent for us," Bryant said about the senior forward. "He brings leadership and gets us ready to go every game."

Snowdale doesn't put up big numbers on a regular basis, but he and teammate Kyle Pinkus bring a level of toughness on defense.

Cohasset plays at Carver tonight (Friday, Jan. 25) at 6:30 p.m.

Family bonding on the high seas

Felicity Long
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Aboard the Liberty of the Seas — There comes a time in every family, no matter how tightknit, when for kids the idea of traveling with parents is a lot less appealing than hanging out with friends. That said, cruise lines have put a lot of energy into creating a product that entertains hard-to-please teens.

A case in point is Royal Caribbean's new Liberty of the Seas, a 3,634-passenger ship, which shares the title of world's largest cruise ship with its sister, Freedom of the Seas.

Lured by features that include onboard surfing, indoor ice skating and a rock-climbing wall, I set out to experience the Liberty with my 14-year-old daughter, Chloe, on a weeklong eastern Caribbean cruise out of Miami.

It was the wave pool that proved to be the A-list attraction. The FlowRider lives up to the hype, drawing crowds of kids and adults looking to brave the wave. Even though staff is on hand to help surfers climb onto their surfboards, falls are frequent, much to the hilarity of the spectators - bathing suit mishaps add to the laughter. (We recommend you wear a T-shirt over your suit.)

Because we had three full days at sea, we had plenty of time to snag some rays at the ship's main outdoor swimming pool and H20 Zone, where water sculptures and spray features are a real hit for families with younger kids.

Chloe and I strapped on skates and hit the indoor ice rink, where you can also watch an impressive ice show performed by a professional cast.

With the ship attracting a family crowd, Adventure Ocean youth programming is offered at five age levels for kids 3 to 17.

I had to nudge Chloe to try the teen program, not so much because she was driving me crazy - she wasn't - but because I knew she would have more fun if she found a few kids her own age to hang out with.

She quickly made friends, and the activities turned out to be pretty cool - especially Scratch DJ 101, with hands-on turntable lessons created by New York's Scratch DJ Academy. Teens also have their own lounge called Fuel. And young drama queens can try their acting chops via a series of performance sessions taught by professionals from New York City's Camp Broadway children's theater program.

With Chloe occupied, I had time to enjoy drinks in the bar and sneak away by myself to the adults-only solarium area, lured by hot tubs that sexily extend over the edge of the deck.

A favorite feature for both of us was the ship's Royal Promenade, an atrium-style interior walkway lined with shops and restaurants where there is nearly always a party, musical event or parade going on. Picture Jumbie dancers on stilts, jugglers entertaining small fry, performances by a classical trio and a few uniformed crew zipping around on Segways and you get the idea.

The shops had some surprisingly trendy items, including Roxy jeans and T-shirts and Havaianas flip-flops, all for about what you'd expect to pay on shore.

The Promenade is also the place to come for a free slice of pizza, a deli sandwich or fresh-baked cookies. Or you can pony up a few dollars for a Ben & Jerry's ice cream or designer coffee drink.

For a splurge, the ship's Day Spa not only offers a full menu of adult treatments, but also a program for kids with treatments like Surfers Scrub and Acne Attack Facial. Those under 16 have to have a parent in the room during spa treatments, some of which are quite pricey - about double what you'd pay at home.

Dining venues on the Liberty of the Seas include the three-level main dining room, the Windjammer buffet and the poolside grill. But for us the real attraction was the onboard Johnny Rockets, where onion rings, burgers and floats are served by dancing waiters. The specialty restaurants, Chop's Steakhouse and Portofino, serving Italian (both have a cover charge of $20 per person) are a worthwhile splurge.

While much was happening onboard, there are plenty of options for onshore fun.

On St. Maarten, we signed up for the ship's Loterie Farm Treetop Adventure Tour, a combination zipline and ropes course. Beside the fact that participants had to hook up their own cables at each of the 30 or so treetop stops - and I would encourage the company to get a better system - the course was fun in a high adrenaline sort of way. It made for some good mother-daughter bonding, except that Chloe whipped through the course so fast I barely saw her.

We spent our day in San Juan, Puerto Rico, horseback riding in the rainforest, stopping for a refreshing dip in the river at the halfway point.

In Labadee, Haiti, where Royal Caribbean operates a private beach (but allows pushy vendors) we joined the ship's fitness staff for yoga on the beach, followed by a joyously crazy 2,600-foot Dragon's Breath zipline flight over water.

The smile from Chloe after the hair-raising adventure said it all.

Healthy Cruising

Mainstream cruising has come a long way from the days when it was all about eating and shuffleboard. Having said that, the average passenger can gain up to 7 pounds on a weeklong cruise, according to conventional wisdom. But what if you could reverse the trend and come away a little lighter without sacrificing any of the sun and fun Caribbean cruises are famous for?

Thanks to the new Vitality program (also available on sister ship Freedom of the Seas), this goal might be more attainable than you think. The program intertwines fitness activities, menu choices and shore excursions designed to help cruisers eat more healthfully and get moving.

As someone who regards the shipboard gym as a room you walk through on the way to the spa, I was skeptical at first. But the Vitality program comprised some pretty fun options - tai chi, yoga on the beach, Pilates and even seminars on body age assessment and acupuncture. Even the things I didn't try - such as working with a personal trainer in a boxing ring and jogging on the dedicated jogging trail - were appealing. By the end of the cruise, I was even voluntarily hitting the elliptical trainer.

The seminars on nutrition were a little less interesting to me, partly because they emphasized low-fat dining, while I'm more of a low-carb fan. The menu choices at the Windjammer buffet featured plenty of low-fat items while not as many fresh vegetables as I would have liked. The salad bar, however, was consistently first rate, and the Vitality options at the sit-down restaurants were appetizing and included a full range of appetizers and desserts.

First Parish to host parenting seminar

The program will focus on discipline methods that work, how to prevent tantrums, how to make rules your child will follow, routines that make life easier, how to care for your child at different stages and great ways to take care of yourself.

Is parenting your little one tougher than you thought it would be? First Parish Unitarian-Universalist on Cohasset Common, with the help of The Social Service League of Cohasset, will host the nationally-celebrated parenting course, "1, 2, 3, 4, Parents!" for the parents of children 1 to 4.

"1, 2, 3, 4 Parents!" is a two-hour, three-session video-based interactive learning experience that is both entertaining and educational. The program is written by national parenting experts, Dr. Michael Popkin, Dr. Betsy Gard and Dr. Marilyn Montgomery. Jan Tedeschi of Marshfield will facilitate all sessions. Jan has a master's degree in marriage and family therapy, and is a certified school adjustment counselor who has taught active parenting courses for more than a decade.

The program will focus on discipline methods that work, how to prevent tantrums, how to make rules your child will follow, routines that make life easier, how to care for your child at different stages and great ways to take care of yourself. Participants will meet other parents of toddlers and preschoolers and discover what a wonderful difference the program will make for themselves and their families.

The program will take place Tuesdays, Jan. 29, and Feb. 5 and 12, in the livingroom of First Parish. There is a choice of two sessions, 9:15 to 11:15 a.m. or 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The cost is $100 per person for First Parish members and $120 for nonmembers. A 25 percent discount is available for spouses attending the same program. Some financial assistance is available, courtesy of The Social Service League of Cohasset.

The program is open to the entire community. To register call Sandy Bailey, parish administrator, at 781-383-1100. Sign-up is on a first-come first-served basis and classes fill up quickly.

For more information, call Woody Chittick at 781-383-3215 or Jan Tedeschi at 781-659-1885, or visit www.askjantedeschi.com.

In addition, the three-week "Active Parenting Now!" course for parents of children 5 through 12 will be offered beginning Wednesday, Feb. 27.

A.R.T. imitates life

Local actor tackles historically significant role

By R.Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

It was more than 20 years ago now, while he was a student at Cohasset High School, but actor John Kuntz still vividly recalls his first visit to the American Repertory Theatre (A.R.T.).

"The first show I ever saw at the Loeb Drama Center was an A.R.T. production of Harold Pinter's 'The Homecoming.' I remember being so intrigued by it and my memories of it are still clear today. I've been a fan of the A.R.T. ever since," recalled Kuntz by telephone recently. "Some of the best theatrical experiences I have ever had have been at the A.R.T."

Kuntz — a professional actor and playwright and founding member of the Actors Shakespeare Project — is currently realizing a long-held career ambition, making his A.R.T. debut in the Cambridge company's production of "Copenhagen," Michael Frayn's Tony Award-winning play about the relationship between physicists Niels Bohr and Werner Heisenberg.

"I have always wanted to work at the A.R.T. Actors have no control over casting, of course, so how I came to get this show is kind of funny. Scott Zigler, the director of 'Copenhagen,' offered me the part of Werner Heisenberg without making me audition. That's a good thing, too, because otherwise I might never have gotten the role. I'm not very good at three-minute auditions. I've never worked for Scott before, but I think he saw me in 'Richard III' with Actors Shakespeare at the Old South Meeting House and in 'The Pillowman' at the New Rep," says Kuntz, who made his name on Boston area stages in lighter fare like "The SantaLand Diaries" and "Fully Committed."

Zigler hasn't been the only one to take notice of the Boston University graduate. Kuntz has earned both Elliot Norton and IRNE (Independent Reviewers of New England) awards as an actor. In addition, his plays "Sing Me to Sleep" and "Freaks!" both received Norton awards for Outstanding Fringe Production, while his "Jasper Lake" earned both the Michael Kanin and Paula Vogel Playwriting Awards for productions at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C., and the New York Fringe Festival.

In "Copenhagen"—performed first 10 years ago in London, on Broadway in 2000, and on a 2002 national tour that played Boston's Colonial Theatre—Kuntz plays the younger Heisenberg, a German nationalist employed as an atomic researcher by Hitler's Nazi party, who travels to Copenhagen for a meeting with his mentor Bohr and his wife, Margrethe. Frayn's very human drama imagines just what may have happened between the two towering scientists at the pivotal moment in history when both the Allies and the Nazis were embroiled in a race to create the atom bomb.

Kuntz is well aware that the role of Heisenberg, who some believe may have known more about the creation of the atom bomb than he admitted and might actually have steered the Nazis away from pursuing its development, is a significant one.

"This is the biggest production I have ever been involved in. I am very conscious of the fact that I have been entrusted with such an important role."

Sharing the Loeb stage with veteran A.R.T. company members Will LeBow (Niels Bohr) and Karen MacDonald (Margrethe Bohr) has helped Kuntz, especially since the three have worked together previously in the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's production of "Twelfth Night" on Boston Common.

"So much of 'Copenhagen' deals with the relationships between Heisenberg and the Bohrs and there is just so much to wade through that it helps to have a kind of shorthand with your fellow actors. Just knowing Will and Karen has helped me a great deal with this whole experience," says Kuntz, who lives in Cambridge with his partner, Tommy Derrah, a founding member of the A.R.T. acting company. "I respect Will and Karen not only as actors, but also as people. They are both just wonderful."

"Heisenberg really needed Bohr to help him, but World War II had torn them apart. Heisenberg really loved Germany. I think that Frayn really feels for Heisenberg and his desire to stay in Germany and not leave his family. We'll probably never know whether he would have built a bomb for Hitler or was instead just misleading the Nazis. That moment in time has long passed. Heisenberg may not have built the bomb, but he also didn't work to overthrow Hitler. He probably would have been killed if he had said anything to Bohr and then whoever replaced him just might have built the bomb."

The A.R.T. will present "Copenhagen" at the Loeb Drama Center at Harvard University, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge, through Feb. 3. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-47-8300 or go online at amrep.org.

Movie review

Cusack keeps mope alive

Grace is Gone (C)

Film Review
BY AL ALEXANDER

You'd think a movie about a grief-stricken father struggling to find the courage to tell his young daughters that their mother is dead would be emotionally wrenching. Then add in the fact that his wife died while serving her country in Iraq.

Yet "Grace Is Gone" is anything but depressing, eliciting more jeers than tears, as writer-director James C. Strouse invests more in political views than human insight. Heck, I'm not even sure Stanley Philips, the dopey dad played by John Cusack, is even human.

He certainly doesn't behave like one, especially around his kids, 12-year-old Heidi (Shelan O'Keefe) and 8-year-old Dawn (Gracie Bednarczyk), to whom he remains distant if not disconnected. He's bitter, you see, over being booted from the Army because of his poor eyesight (metaphor alert!).

It's left him depressed and a tad emasculated, especially knowing that his wife, who he met in the service, is in the thick of battle while he's stuck leading a battalion of underachievers as the manager of a Home Depot.

This, of course, requires Cusack to mope like he's never moped before. He's good at it, too. But it makes his character appear so self-involved that it's almost impossible to feel empathy for him or his plight after his wife is killed by an IED and he's left to pick up the pieces of his shattered dreams.

The girls, though, are another story. Them you care about. The two terrific young actresses convey the fear and loneliness of their characters in rich and subtle tones.

Stanley (John Cusack) ponders how to carry on after losing his wife.

You just wish they didn't have such a cowardly jerk for a father. What kind of dad is too afraid to tell his kids that they no longer have a mother? Would he rather they learn it from their friends, their principal, the TV news?

In Stanley's case, he'd rather they never heard it at all. So he does what any responsible parent would do: He yanks them out of school, loads them in the car and heads south to Florida to visit an amusement park. Enchanted Gardens, to be exact.

Strouse couches the trip as a desperate attempt by a father looking to prolong the innocence of his children, but it's really just an ineffectual gimmick for him to protest both the war and slackening American values, particularly a perceived corporate takeover of the government.

We see it in the succession of Wal-Marts, Home Depots and various other box-store chains that litter the American landscape.

It's a compelling theory, and one that would likely make for an excellent movie — if it were in the hands of a more competent filmmaker than Strouse, whose only previous experience was writing the script for Steve Buscemi's "Lonesome Jim," a flick I equate with a slow crawl through hell.

While "Grace" is a significant step up from that, it still lacks scope and grit, two things Strouse really needs to work on, along with his painfully predictable dialogue. On more than a dozen occasions, I found myself reciting the next line before the actors even opened their mouths.

That's almost as big a letdown as the scene when Stanley finally delivers the sad news to his kids. You'd think after 90 minutes of build up that Strouse might make us privy to Stanley's strong, sensitive words, but he instead chooses to drown out the film's most powerful moment with a crappy pop song. What was he thinking? Did he decide to personally begin the writers' strike a year early?

The movie could have been worse, though. A lot worse, if not for the performances by the three leads and the undervalued Alessandro Nivola as Stanley's hippie-dippy dead beat brother, who of course opposes the war and anything to do with the establishment — like finding a job. But, as good as they are, there's just no saving "Grace."

Theater review

'Third' comes up short

By R. Scott Reedy

Freshman student Woodson Bull III, or "Third" (Graham Hamilton, r.) tries to convince professor Laurie Jameson (Maureen Anderman) that he didn't plagiarize his paper on King Lear in the Huntington Theatre Company's production of "Third: by Wendy Wasserstein, running through Feb. 3 at the Huntington's main stage, the Boston University Theatre.

Many years ago, as I made my way up the aisle of Broadway's Plymouth Theatre at the intermission of a matinee of "The Heidi Chronicles," I noticed playwright Wendy Wasserstein seated alone in the back row of the orchestra taking notes on a legal pad. When I mentioned the sighting to the show's press agent, I learned that this was not uncommon. Apparently, Wasserstein regularly checked in on productions of even her Pulitzer Prize and Tony Award-winning plays, and sometimes revised her work for the future.

Watching a recent performance of the Huntington Theatre Company's "Third" at the Boston University Theatre, I couldn't help but wonder what might be different if Wasserstein — who died in January 2006 of lymphoma — had been around to shepherd the play from its late 2005 off-Broadway run to the regionals.

What is now, sadly, her last play is a Wasserstein effort that, like her earlier works, tracks the progression of the author's own life. Her first major success, "Uncommon Women and Others," which ran off-Broadway in 1977, was her graduate thesis at the Yale School of Drama and reflected her own experiences as an undergraduate at Mount Holyoke College. In her subsequent plays, from "The Heidi Chronicles," which explored feminism and the changing roles of women in society from the 1960s to the 1980s, to "The Sisters Rosensweig," with its look at the relationships between three Jewish sisters and the role their faith plays in their lives, through "An American Daughter" and "Old Money," Wasserstein made her name with her depictions of strong female characters wrestling with personal insecurities.

That tradition is carried on in "Third," where the lead character is a gifted East Coast English professor, Laurie Jameson, whose steadfast liberal leanings lead her to accuse a male student, Woodson Bull III, whom she believes to be both politically conservative and economically privileged, of plagiarism when she doubts his masterfully written King Lear essay is really his own work. The resulting conflict pits Laurie against not only the student, but also her family and friends and ultimately causes the longtime academic to question her own judgment.

The professor's family includes an unseen husband who we learn is in the throes of a midlife crisis, a college-aged daughter itching to ditch Swarthmore for romance and relocation with an older bank teller, and a father whose dementia seems to be intentionally like that of King Lear himself. Her friends are represented by another female professor, Nancy Gordon, who is battling cancer.

Director Richard Seer does well with material that, while interesting, does not seem fully developed and characters whose conflicts are not adequately detailed in the script. We see the professor tell the student she plans to charge him with plagiarism, but we don't see them together again until an epilogue in which she merely explains motivations that should have been explored dramatically.

Maureen Anderman has built a loyal Huntington following with finely etched portrayals in "Rabbit Hole" and "The Sisters Rosensweig," but has less to work with here even in the starring role of Laurie Jameson. As Woodson Bull III, the college wrestler and Shakespeare scholar whose nickname gives the play its name, Graham Hamilton does as well as he can with his character's overnight transition from enthusiastic student to embittered cynic. The most affecting work comes from Robin Pearson Rose who infuses her cancer-stricken Nancy Gordon with compelling naturalism and strength.

While "Third" does not feel like it is ready to takes its place alongside Wasserstein's earlier works, it does leaves one wishing there could more from its author.

The Huntington Theatre Company will present "Third" at the Boston University Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, Boston, through Feb. 3. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-266-0800 or go online at huntingtontheatre.org.

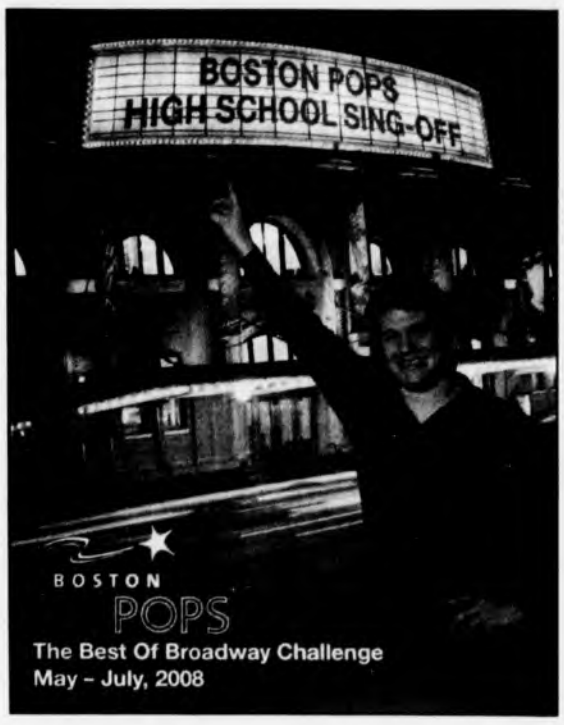
Boston Pops searching for the next teen star

By Dana Barbuto
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Maybe it's the "High School Musical" phenomenon or the "American Idol" influence, but the Boston Pops have just launched their own statewide teen musical talent search.

Called the "Boston Pops High School Sing-Off: A Best of Broadway Challenge," it's the first Boston Pops musical theater competition for Massachusetts high school students. It is patterned after the popular POPSearch, the contest that has offered amateur singers, including Kingston's Frances Botelho-Hoeg, a chance to perform with the Pops.

"'High School Musical' is a phenomenon and one of the cool things about it is that it's turning youngsters onto musical theater," said Keith Lockhart, Pops conductor for the past 13 years. The goal of the competition is to showcase the talent of local high school students, Lockhart said. "It's an amazing platform for them," he said.



Students are to pick songs from such Broadway greats as "Sweeney Todd," "Chicago," "West Side Story" and "My Fair Lady." Lockhart, who called himself a musical theater geek, said the Pops have a great love of Broadway and of finding new talent.

Entries are being accepted now. The winner will be featured in the Boston Pops' Fourth of July concert at the Charles River Esplanade.

Students, solo or up to five people, are to submit audition tapes of musical theater vocal works by May 9. Lockhart and the Pops management will choose the top 20 from the taped auditions. The next round is a live performance with the orchestra, from which six will be left standing. Six goes to three for the next round and then the winner will be selected at the July 1 concert.

For complete details on how to enter, go to www.BostonPops.org. The entry fee is $10.

Enfield Paranormal Society says Town Hall is haunted

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Town Hall is haunted. That's the determination made by a team of ghost hunters who investigated paranormal activity within the "old" part of Town Hall this past weekend. A five-person team calling themselves the Enfield Paranormal Society investigated the possibility of a ghostly presence at the Town Hall.

After two nights of investigation in the dead of the night, founder and lead investigator Matt Kondracki has declared the Cohasset Town Hall haunted — and he has evidence to back up his claim.

On infrared camera, the Enfield Paranormal Society captured a door that leads to the Town Hall attic slowly closing all by itself around 11:30p.m. Saturday night. The other members of the crew were outside and he was downstairs in the auditorium.

Kondracki wanted to ensure the door closing was truly paranormal activity, not a draft or a person's doing. Accompanied by a police officer that stopped in to check on them, Kondracki attempted to de-bunk the video by trying to re-create the closing of the door in the same fashion. He could not close the door without being seen by the camera.

"We couldn't do it man-made," said Kondracki, which led him to conclude, "Something in this Town Hall is haunted."

The camera's positioning on this particular door, located on the second floor just off the Board of Health office, was purposeful. On Friday night several of his team either witnessed or heard the door slam shut.

To Kondracki, the door closing was the smoking gun evidence of the weekend, but not his only evidence of paranormal activity in Cohasset's Town Hall.

On Friday night, Kondracki and his crew began to set up cameras and digital recording equipment around 8p.m., with all lights being turned off around 9:30p.m. The first night they were able to capture electronic voice phenomenon, or EVPs, on a digital recorder. Ghosts use the electrical energy in a digital recorder to manifest themselves. EVPs cannot be heard by the ear alone, but can be heard through a tape recorder. On Friday night, they recorded a male voice saying a stern and clear "no."

"EVP does not make a house haunted," said Kondracki in an interview Friday. Unexplained heavy breathing was also caught on the digital recorder.

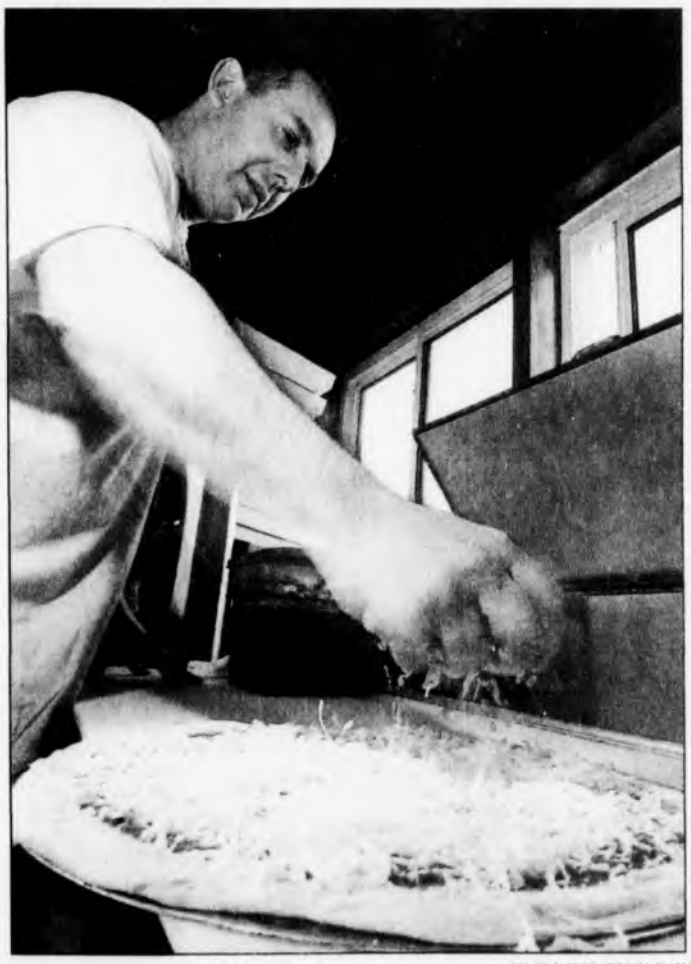
Pizza eatery knows its place

Good Fella's reopens on Ripley Road

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

For loyal customers, the seven months without Good Fella's Pizza may have seemed like an eternity. The tasty pizzas and homemade pastas Cohasset has grown accustomed to during Good Fella's four years in business vacated its Ripley Road location last summer.

"A lot of customers came to Norwell to get their pizza," says owner and chef Joe Armstrong of his seven-month stint inside Drums Emporium in Norwell Center. But now the Good Fella's Cohasset residents had grown to love is back within town limits and better than ever, says Armstrong.



Late last year Armstrong re-opened the doors to his original Good Fella's location, tucked behind and between Adrian Morris Salon and Bernard's. An expanded menu with more lunch offerings like paninis and simple sandwiches have been added.

Armstong considers himself a hidden gem in Cohasset because of his off the beaten path location and the wide array of homemade meals he prepares each day.

"I want to be everybody's personal chef," says Armstrong. He thinks the alley-like location and Greenbush train only add to the ambiance of his restaurant named after Martin Scorcese's Oscar-winning movie of the same name.

But it's the food that keeps people coming back, says Armstrong. Good Fella's makes own special tomato sauce and homemade salad dressings. The

Super Tuesday

Presidential primary is coming to town

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset is getting ready to wield its collective voting power on the upcoming "Super Tuesday" presidential primary vote.

The Massachusetts' primary was originally set for March 4, but was moved up so the state could participate along with 22 other states in the Super Tuesday primary, perhaps allowing the state's voters to have a more influential say in the ultimate presidential candidates.

Voting for precincts 1 and 2 is held in the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium from 7a.m. to 8p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 5. During the presidential primary, voters will also cast ballots for Town Committee members and State Committee Man and Woman.

The Town Clerk's office has been busy this past month registering and filling requests for absentee ballots.

"We've had a lot of new young people come in to register to vote," said Town Clerk Marion Douglas, including high school seniors and college level students, as well as residents who have recently moved to town, "some were excited because it was their first time voting."

Many of those younger voters who are now away at college came to get absentee ballots to ensure they were

Town Census mailed Jan. 21

The Town Census for 2008 was mailed to each household the week of Jan.21. Information obtained from the census is ultimately used to prepare the street list, annual registry of voters, school list, dog owner list and jury list. It also establishes eligibility for resident's tuition at state colleges, veteran reimbursement, senior citizen programs and other benefits. The census provides information to various departments throughout the town.

Dog forms are on a tear-off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 2008. Dog forms need to be returned as soon as possible with a current rabies certificate although some residents may have recently renewed the 2007 license.

Anyone who did not receive the census should call the Town Clerk's office at 781-383-4100.

Police Beat

Wave of motor vehicle mishaps last week

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police urge motorists, who hit a car and there is no one around, to leave a note or call the station.

There was a spate of minor accidents last week, some of which were due to wintry weather.

• On Tuesday (Jan. 22), a walk-in at the station at 12:24 p.m. reported his 2005 Ford pickup had been struck while parked at the post office. There were marks on the tailgate door. Police have a partial plate number and color of the gray SUV believed to be responsible. The incident is under investigation.

• On Wednesday (Jan. 23) at 1:29 a.m., a caller, whose backyard backs onto Atlantic Avenue, reported a car had "just crashed into her yard" and slid into the stockade fence. Officers confirmed the damage but there was no sign of the vehicle. The caller could not provide a plate number.

• Police say a medical issue was apparently responsible for a crash in the village last Wednesday (Jan. 23) at about 1:42 p.m. involving several parked cars. The operator of a 1998 Toyota from Cohasset appears to have experienced a medically related incident while driving into the village from the direction of the Common on South Main Street. He apparently passed out striking a car that was in the angled spaces on the right side of the road and then continued on, hitting four more cars that were parked in the angled spaces along the opposite side of the street just beyond the hardware store. One of the parked cars was occupied but that person was not injured, Chief James Hussey said. The operator of the Toyota was transported to the hospital. Three of the cars involved had to be towed, he said. "We were very fortunate there were no serious injuries," Hussey said.

• What was described as a minor accident involving a 2004 Cadillac and a 2001 Saab last Wednesday (Jan. 23) at about 3 p.m. at Shaw's was worked out between the people involved. Chief Hussey said the man in the Cadillac accepted fault for the incident and the matter would be worked out between the insurance companies.

• A motorist with a 1996 Nissan parked outside Mullaney's reported the driver's side, front-quarter panel was scraped by an unknown vehicle in an apparent hit and run last Friday (Jan. 25) at about 4:30 p.m. There were no witnesses, police said.

Chief Hussey explained that leaving the scene after property damage could be a criminal offense. Police urge motorists, who hit a car and there is no one around, to leave a note or call the station.

• Snowy road conditions contributed to a single-car accident on Hull Street on Sunday (Jan. 27) at about 9:17 a.m. A 2001 Ford Focus was heading north toward Hull when the driver lost control near a bend in the road and slid off the road into a tree. There was front-end damage to the car, which had to be towed. The operator had no apparent injuries.

• A car went into a slide near the Roy house on Margin Street on Sunday (Jan. 27) at about 10:15 a.m. and hit a stonewall. The Dodge Stratus was driven by a Weymouth resident, who was not injured. The car was towed, police said.

• On Sunday (Jan. 27) at about 11:40 a.m. a 2007 Ford driven by a Cohasset woman was traveling west on Jerusalem Road near house number 250 when an oncoming 2006 Toyota driven by a woman from New Jersey came around the bend and went across the road hitting the Ford. The road was snow covered, police said. Both cars were towed. The women were checked out at the scene but were not transported to the hospital.

• A 1994 Saturn driven by a Cohasset resident that was headed north on upper King Street near Lily Pond swerved to avoid an unidentified oncoming car and went off the road to avoid a collision at about 5:15 p.m. Sunday (Jan. 27). The Saturn nicked a utility pole but did not damage the pole. The car was towed and the operator had no apparent injuries, police said.

Bike missing

An Atlantic Avenue resident whose home has a detached garage reported the apparent theft of a gray, 26-in., Trek off-road bicycle last week.

The garage door was closed but not locked, police said. Officers checked the area and did not find anything.

The homeowner, who had not recently checked the garage, is not sure when the bike was taken but it was sometime during the past two months. The incident was reported Saturday.

Furnace turned-off

A resident told police that she believes a neighbor in the same multi-unit dwelling with a "beef" may have turned off her furnace. She called a maintenance worker when her heat was off and the worker determined the furnace had been turned off. Police are investigating.

Camouflage

After receiving a report from Scituate that a man dressed in camouflage had pointed a gun and threatened to shoot a woman's dog in that town and fled in a red pickup toward Cohasset, Cohasset police searched the area. However, nothing was found, police said.

Rifle piece

An officer driving by the maintenance shack at the Cohasset Golf Club found a piece of a 22-caliber rifle that was rusty and not usable, police said. The officer took the gun piece into custody. Police do not know how it got there or whom it belonged to.

Road rage

Police said a woman reported that a man blocked her in last week, got out of his car and yelled at her near Shaw's. The man was frustrated that the woman in the car in front of him was talking on her cell phone. The woman called 9-1-1 and police went to the scene and peace was restored. The male driver was traveling north in the parking lot of Shaw's Plaza on the road way in front of the stores and the woman pulled out from the lot and entered that same roadway when the incident occurred, police said.

Pocketbook found

A man walking on North Main Street near the train station found a woman's pocketbook and the contents strewn around and brought them into the police station. The pocketbook belonged to a Scituate resident and was stolen from her car during one of the recent pocketbook thefts in Cohasset. Police returned the items to her.

There were two more pocketbook thefts in Hingham this week. In both cases, police said the women took some money and left their pocketbooks on the front seat of an unlocked car. They both ran inside a store to conduct a quick errand and when they came out, their pocketbooks were gone.

Police are urging people to lock valuables in the trunk or take them with them if they leave their cars, even if it is just for a few minutes.

Summonsed

A Scituate woman is being summonsed to court after she was stopped for having a headlight out and no front license plate. An officer was on patrol Saturday night near the Mobil Mart when the officer saw the car. Further investigation revealed the car's registration had been revoked due to insurance cancellation. She will be summonsed on the charge of driving a car without insurance and for defective equipment. Police had the car towed.

Water rebate program ends

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Hingham residents are going to see an increase in their water bills.

While water rates have not changed, the clock runs out this month on a 10-year rebate program approved in 1998 that affects customers of Aquarion Water Company of Massachusetts and those of 21 other districts.

Residential customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset will see an increase of about $24.25 per quarter or $100 annually. That means the amount the average customer pays would go from about $549 to $646 per year.

Back in the 1990s state Sen. Robert Hedlund and then state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray worked to grandfather in communities that had already built treatment plants to meet federal safe water act standards to receive reimbursements for certain costs.

"Essentially what had happened was the federal government created an incentive for communities to do what these 22 districts had already done," state Rep. Garrett Bradley explained.

Aquarion's predecessor, Mass-American Water Company, built the $37 million treatment plant in Hingham that came on line in 1996.

"The Massachusetts legislation made $8 million available annually for 10 years for reimbursement through a line item in the state budget," Bradley explained. The federal government reimbursed the state for no more than 50 percent of that amount.

Bradley and Hedlund are sponsoring new legislation that would extend the reimbursement program for another 10 years because interest on the debt on the treatment plant was not part of the calculation of reimbursable costs. Post 1998, the federal government changed the rules from a straight grant program to low-interest loans that could include the cost of the debt service in the reimbursable amount. The 22 affected districts – including Aquarion's customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset – have not benefited from this change. "We think equity dictates," Bradley said. The legislation would spread $80 million in reimbursements over another 10 years.

Hedlund said he is proud to have created this program that resulted in significant savings for ratepayers over the last 10 years.

"With that 10-year program ending, we have been fighting hard to continue the program based on the issue of program equity," Hedlund said. "Right now it is an uphill battle, but I will continue to fight for the ratepayers of my district."

Bradley also said the bill could have a tough road ahead because the state is facing a $1.3 billion deficit. If passed, the bill would not take effect until the end of the session in July.

In the meantime, the funding on the original program is running out at the end of January.

For a more detailed explanation of the water rebate, see page 14.

Planning Board meets Mondays

For the indefinite future, Planning Board meetings will be held Monday evenings. Therefore, the Planning Board will meet Mondays, Feb. 4 and 25, and March 3 and 10. The meeting date of Monday, March 24, is tentative.

After many years of Wednesday evening meetings the board knows this will be an adjustment, and will make every effort to make this a smooth transition, and accommodate any conflicts this change may cause.

Budget talks start in earnest

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

If money becomes available in the budget, the $90,000 school cuts will be among the first to be funded.

The budget season is upon Cohasset. Town Manager Bill Griffin unveiled his fiscal 2009 budget message to the Board of Selectmen Monday.

A recommended figure of $36,306,872 was brought forth after removing roughly $518,000 in department requests from town department heads; about $92,000 of that number came out of the proposed school budget. The school budget makes up 45 percent of the town's operating budget.

"The budget I'm proposing is a no-override budget," said Griffin, but an override discussion is not out of the question.

"Since my budget just came out, I would think it is too early to say that there definitely will not be an override," stated Griffin in an e-mail Tuesday, "the School Committee will have to meet and discuss their budget after my reduction, and others might advocate for one."

Overrides allow voters to increase taxes above the limit of 2-1/2 percent set by the state to increase revenue to the town. No override was proposed last year, but the two years prior to that brought the override question to the ballot box. Both times the override failed.

Much discussion will take place with the School Committee in the coming month to determine what the right number for the schools will be, said Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh in a phone interview. While the school department has proposed a budget increase of 4.9 percent over fiscal 2008, Griffin has recommended a 4.24 percent increase, a difference of $92,496. The School Committee will not certify a budget number until after a public hearing on the budget set for March 5.

Going into budget preparations, town departments were asked to submit two budgets, one a level services/ enhanced version and the other reflecting a 2 percent less FY08 budget. Some departments requested new staffing, including the police, fire and facilities management departments, but all those requests were denied for the time being. Griffin has prioritized those requests if and when additional funds become available.

The tax levy is always the major source of revenue (roughly 70 percent) with $26,502,911, which includes a 2.5 percent increase in the tax levy and an estimated $450,000 in new growth revenue from new construction or renovation.

When the Governor's budget was revealed last week, numbers were less than Griffin anticipated, particularly with Chapter 70 funds. Griffin said the only blessing in receiving less state aid is it does not comprise a major part of the budget (just under 10 percent), "Cohasset doesn't receive a whole lot of state aid."

The Governor's budget also decreased lottery aid, but made it up by incorporating casino fees, "I'm certainly not confident in what's going to happen with casinos," said Griffin and therefore his recommended budget did not include assume receipt of the town's $63,000 share in casino fees.

The proposed budget is $921,331 or 2.6 percent over the fiscal 2008 budget. The general government budget would see an increase of $580,023 or 1.86 percent. Of that increase, $579,997 is for the schools, $94,854 is for benefits and health insurance. All other town departments were cut by approximately 0.5 to 1.5 percent from the fiscal 2008 budget.

Variables are still at work within the budget numbers. New growth is expected to be about $450,000, but firm numbers from the assessors won't be in until fall 2008. Final budget numbers from the state will not come until the late spring. All town union contracts are due to expire on June 30, 2008, currently only step raises are incorporated into the recommended budget. Health insurance could increase up to 9.1 percent, but could also remain level. With a few winter months still ahead, a portion of free cash might have to be used to address the snow and ice deficit.

"Everyday it snows I feel less confident," said Griffin.

If money becomes available in the budget, the $90,000 school cuts will be among the first to be funded. Followed closely by an additional facilities management maintenance worker, a fire prevention officer, a police patrolman position, a police school resource officer and others. Griffin's priority list totals about $371,000.

"We had to squeeze this budget, it's really getting tough here," said Griffin.

While over the summer the Griffin and Finance Director Mike Buckley presented predictions of a roughly $410,000 shortfall for fiscal 2009. But in the last six months various factors have come into play to close the gap between projected revenues and expenses.

In the preliminary prediction Griffin assumed the school budget to go up 6 percent, while now the school's proposed budget is up 4.9 percent and in Griffin's recommended budget 4.24 percent on fiscal 2008. A three percent increase on the town-side budget was forecasted, but after reductions the budget will rise only 1.5 percent. Initial conservative estimates on increases in health insurance and county pension assessment proved to be too conservative and eased up the budget restraints.

CPC looks forward to Town Meeting

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"We're starting this year off in much better fiscal shape than we'd thought we would."
— Stuart Ivimey, Community Preservation Committee

The Community Preservation Committee is ramping up to a very active season. Projects from myriad organizations both private groups and town committees have applied for CPC funds. Meetings began this week with a full agenda (see related story).

Although the state match percentage is in question for the coming October, CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey says Cohasset is in great shape for this round of projects.

"We're starting this year off in much better fiscal shape than we'd thought we would," said Ivimey in a phone interview. He was conservative with the numbers last spring when he heard rumblings the state match for CPC fund may not be the dollar for dollar match the town — and towns across the state — has enjoyed since Cohasset adopting the Community Preservation Act in 2001.

The Community Preservation Act's funds are generated from two sources, a town real estate tax surcharge (in Cohasset 1.5 percent) and some level of state match, determined year-to-year. The state funds are derived from a $20 surcharge on all documents filed in the Recorder of Deeds office statewide (e.g. mortgages, deeds, homesteads, etc.).

This past October, the town received a 100 percent match from the state on last year's town CPC surtax. Ivimey said they earned more interest on their funds in the neighborhood of $25,000. And to top it all off, at last year's annual Town Meeting voters allocated $150,000 to service the remaining Beechwood Ballpark debt, but that entire total did not need to be spent.

"We took in more money and spent less than we thought we would," said Ivimey. Then, no projects came forward for consideration at the Special Town Meeting in November.

He has again planned conservatively for the upcoming year, "I'm confident we will receive over a 50 percent match, but I don't have any confidence in a number beyond that."

In fiscal 2008, the town will collect $330,000 from the town property tax surcharge. The average single family home valued at $848,000 will pay roughly $120 in CPA tax this year. Ivimey is estimating the state will match those funds with at least $165,000 this coming October, giving the town an estimated revenue of about $500,000.

So far, six projects have applied for Community Preservation funds to be allocated at the Annual Town Meeting March 29. The nine-member committee began to sift through the requests this past Tuesday.

Ivimey is trying to get a head start on the requests so the committee's recommendations can be included in the printed warrant sent out to each household prior to the Annual Town Meeting.

"I want to give the applicants enough time to amend their requests and to answer whatever questions the committee may have," said Ivimey.

The CPA at a glance

- Funds from the CPA can be spent in three specific areas: open space, affordable housing, and historic preservation.
- Aside from minor administrative costs, the CPC does not spend money. The CPC only makes recommendations to the legislative authority in a town or municipality, (in Cohasset's case, Town Meeting).
- Each year, the CPC must spend or bank 10 percent of its annual revenue on each of the three specific areas.
- CPA funds are generated from two sources, a town real estate tax surcharge (in Cohasset 1.5 percent) and a some level of state match, determined from year-to-year. So far Cohasset and other participating towns have received a 100 percent state match each year. The state funds are derived from a $20 surcharge on all documents filed in the Recorder of Deeds Office statewide (e.g. mortgages, deeds, homesteads, etc.).
- The average single family home valued at $848,000 will pay $118.93 in CPA tax this year.

CPC projects line up for funding requests

Not an easy ride for Housing Partnership

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Community Preservation Committee has its work cut out for them. From archival restoration to perc tests to watershed protection, the applications came from diverse applicants and interests. At the end of the marathon meeting and reviewing seven applications, the CPC had voted to recommend a total of $423,679 to projects around town.

Funds from the Community Preservation Act can be spent in three specific areas: open space, housing, and historic preservation. Each year, the CPC must spend or bank percent of its annual revenue on each of the three specific areas. Projects falling under all three categories came before the committee Tuesday night.

Although the CPC reviews and make recommendations on all applications, Town Meeting will ultimately decide whether to fund any of the recommended projects.

While the two applications for historical preservation passed with little controversy or discussion, the community housing and open space projects sparked ample discussion and led to three split votes within the committee.

The Housing Partnership Committee came forth with two applications for funding. First, the Partnership was looking for a $20,000 allocation to perform multiple perc tests on 14 acres of town land located that backs up to the South Shore Music Circus.

Earlier this month, the Board of Selectmen authorized the Partnership to do the perc tests with a 3-2 split vote. Now, the Partnership needs the money to actually do the tests.

"Right now, we don't have any particular plans."

Debate on whether housing was the highest and best use of the land was discussed at length. CPC member Susan Sardina said the Partnership had to start somewhere in order to develop housing while member Al Moore argued for open space instead of "opening a can of worms" with housing. Callahan explained the need for a subsidy like utilizing town land in order to make affordable housing economically feasible.

Before the vote, CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey clarified one point, "if we recommend the $20,000 (for the perc test) it by no means can be interpreted as an endorsement in any way, shape or form for a potential housing development (on the land)."

The CPC recommended the project in a 5-2 vote (Moore and member Nathaniel Palmer were the two dissenting votes).

Without having a minute to catch its breath, the Housing Partnership jumped into its request to have the CPC fund a to-be-created "Housing Trust" fund. An article seeking to create a Housing Trust committee and fund is likely to be on the spring Town Meeting warrant.

A Housing Trust has been created in towns across the state, including Hingham and Duxbury. A state statute sets out the general terms of a Housing Trust. At its simplest terms, the Housing Trust is the functional equivalent of a separate enterprise fund, like the water and sewer departments, set up for the purposed of developing affordable housing, said Callahan.

"It gives the town flexibility to react to the market place and not be limited by the town meeting cycle," said Callahan. The Housing Trust still has checks and balances with a nine-member board, including representatives from the Housing Partnership and Board of Selectmen, overseeing the fund. Any decision to buy or sell land would have to go before the Board of Selectmen.

The Housing Partnership proposed transferring all or some of the CPC's housing sub-account funds, currently at $196,206, to the Housing Trust if successfully created at Town Meeting. Each subsequent year, Town Meeting would have to vote to transfer the funds from the CPC account to the Housing Trust.

Callahan said funding sources could ultimately come from multiple sources in addition to the CPC: developers, donations or general revenue.

Palmer was concerned transferring the money to the Housing Trust would shift the checks from a general vote of Town Meeting to the Selectmen. However, Callahan argued Town Meeting would still have the authority to appropriate the CPC money to the Housing Trust every year.

Ivimey acknowledged the positives of the application: the Housing Trust would have expertise in affordable housing and have a professional consultant to advise them. But, also felt the proposal took away from the spirit of the CPA funds, "the CPC is giving up its control over the money."

Callahan said the Housing Trust was a better, more efficient mechanism to enable to creation of affordable housing, "a lot of other towns have trusts and CPCs working together, we shouldn't be at odds."

The divisiveness caused over affordable housing and development in the community was a fight member Al Moore did not want the CPC to be a part of, citing the neighborhood outcry over the Partnership's proposal at 25 Ripley Road early last year.

"I'm asking you to support affordable housing and the tools to create it," said Callahan before a vote was taken. The application was denied in a 5-2 vote (members Margy Charles and Susan Sardina were the dissenting votes).

Watershed protection

Five years ago the town set off on a mission to acquire land around Lily Pond, the town's primary water supply. After acquiring a little over 200 acres, one 20-acre parcel remains that is critical to water protection, said Water Commission Chairman Glenn Pratt. Once the land is acquired a conservation restriction will be placed on the land to keep it as open space.

"We think we have everything set out to get this," said Pratt. In addition to seeking $250,000 in CPC funding, several other sources — state funds, town organizations, private organizations and private donors — are lined up to contribute to the purchase price of roughly $500,000, a cost on par with previous land purchases in the area. The Water Commission has received a $146,000 grant from the state's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs to put toward the purchase of the land. The Cohasset Conservation Trust and Water Commission are kicking in $25,000 each and the Bates family trust, $30,000. The Trustees of Reservations, an abutter to the property, is willing to contribute $50,000.

"Town Meeting support this unanimously (in 2004), to me we're charged with making it happen," said Pratt.

Concerns were raised over the price of the land, which seemed high to some of the committee members considering the current real estate market. However, Pratt said negotiation over the price of the land has been ongoing for several years and the clock was ticking on the weighty state grant, which expires on June 30, 2008.

The committee discussed the importance of this land purchase versus other projects coming down the line, including Town Hall restoration and was split on this issue. Some felt protecting the water supply was of utmost importance while another said there was enough open space in town.

The motion to recommend the requested $250,000 allocation failed, then was amended to $200,000 and was voted down again. Ultimately, the motion passed in 4-3 split vote to allocate $175,000.

Other recommended projects

• The Housing Authority requested an electrical generator for the community room to be used the event of an emergency. The entire complex runs on electrical heat and air conditioning so if the power goes out residents are left without heat. The cost is $30,000. The CPC tabled the request to allow the Housing Authority to look into alternative systems that may have more benefit.

• Town Clerk Marion Douglas applied for $50,000 to continue the restoration of the town's archives. Birth, death and marriage certificates need to be preserved, as well as recently discovered town books.

• The Stormwater Management Committee and the Conservation Committee proposed the installation of bio-retention cells, or raingardens, in the watershed around Jacob's Meadow and James Brook. The raingardens would mitigate stormwater pollution from the first flush of rainwater. They have applied to receive a grant from Coastal Zone Management for the project and are hopeful its receipt. The $88,500 request will build about five raingardens, with the CZM grant funding another five. CPC voted to recommend the project.

• The Historical Society requested $51,700 to continue restoring their buildings and better preserving their extensive textile collection. The CPC recommended the allocation.

PASSION PLUNGE

Plunges seemed to be all the news last week, and here we go announcing the big one The 10th Annual Passion Plunge for Special Olympics Massachusetts. This year's event will be Saturday, Feb. 16th, at noon at Nantasket Beach, one of four sites for the Plunge this year. Last year over 940 Plungers raised more than $400,000. Several brave Cohasset supporters have signed on to Plunge already and they are seeking pledges of support for this challenge. Cohasset Special Olympics athletes Jay Nothnagle, Jessica MacDonald and Nicholas Sida were among the first to sign up and they will be joined by Jeff Nothnagle, Graham Sida, Laurel Hickey, Doug Yeager, Chris Evans, Jack DeLorenzo, Rich Quebec, and Bill Greentree. There is still plenty of time to join the South Shore Mariners Team. Special Olympics Massachusetts supports 10,700 athletes with intellectual disabilities who train and compete in 26 sports year-round. No athlete is ever charged to participate and the funds raised by our Cohasset Plungers come back to our local programs. The South Shore Mariners is a team of 85 athletes from ages 8 to 65 from seven area towns.

A significant number of Cohasset residents ventured into the Center for Student Coastal Research recently to learn about Cohasset High School's Summer Institute program and the many research projects that students can join. Those who braved the chilly winds swirling at the harbor on Jan. 21, found dozens of warm and friendly students inside CSCR eager to explain key facts and findings about wetland monitoring, harbor water quality, bacteria at swimming beaches, and many others.

Open House visitors learned that some projects are on-going, some take the form of after school extra curricular activity and some projects start anew come the end of the school year during the Summer Institute 2008. While most projects are geared primarily for students in grades 7 through 12, Mrs. Haran, formerly of Deer Hill, is running an engineering class after school for students in grades 4 through 6. Information about the projects are available at www.ccscr.org.

The Summer Institute is a CMHS program that began in 1999, created by Cohasset High School teachers, Dave Magnussen, Pattie McGrail, Jody Wood, Ruth Fennessey, Ann Thomae, and Jack Buckley. The Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) is the off-campus home for the Summer Institute, but CSCR is operated as a community nonprofit organization dedicated to teaching students how to perform coastal research projects needed in our community.

Inly to host 'Annie' Feb. 8-10

With the help of professional adult actors, directors and musicians, Inly School in Scituate will present the musical "Annie" on the weekend of Feb. 8 to 10. The musical production will be a fundraiser to benefit the school and its programs, many of which are open to the public.

This show is a collaboration involving local professional actors, directors and costume and set designers, as well as members of the school community. Inly students in grades three through eight will play parts such as orphans, mansion staff members and Annie. Professional adult actors, as well as Inly parents, staff and alumni, will fill in the main cast.

The Meehan Family Artsbarn will be transformed into 1930s New York City, with scenes on multiple levels of the barn and stage area. The seating will be arranged so the action will be in, around and through the audience.

All shows are open to the public. The performances will take place at Inly School, 46 Watch Hill Dr., off Route 123 in Scituate, on Friday, Feb. 8, at 7:30 p.m.; Saturday, Feb. 9, at 2 and 7:30 p.m.; and Sunday, Feb. 10, at 2 p.m. Tickets in the main seating area are $25; for information on special front row seats, plus the opening reception, visit inlyschool.org/news. To purchase tickets, call 781-741-5533.

pasta dishes sounds like something just like an Italian grandmother would make: handmade cannelloni con vodka, chicken aosta, penne boscaiola and pasta pomodoro. He's going to be offering "pretty unique" pasta specials in addition to the regular menu items.

Armstrong says his basic philosophy is to serve good food at reasonable prices and people will continue to come back.

The meatballs are substantial to say the least, each boasting a weight of about a half a pound and he's had time to perfect his recipe, "I've been making meatballs since I was six years old."

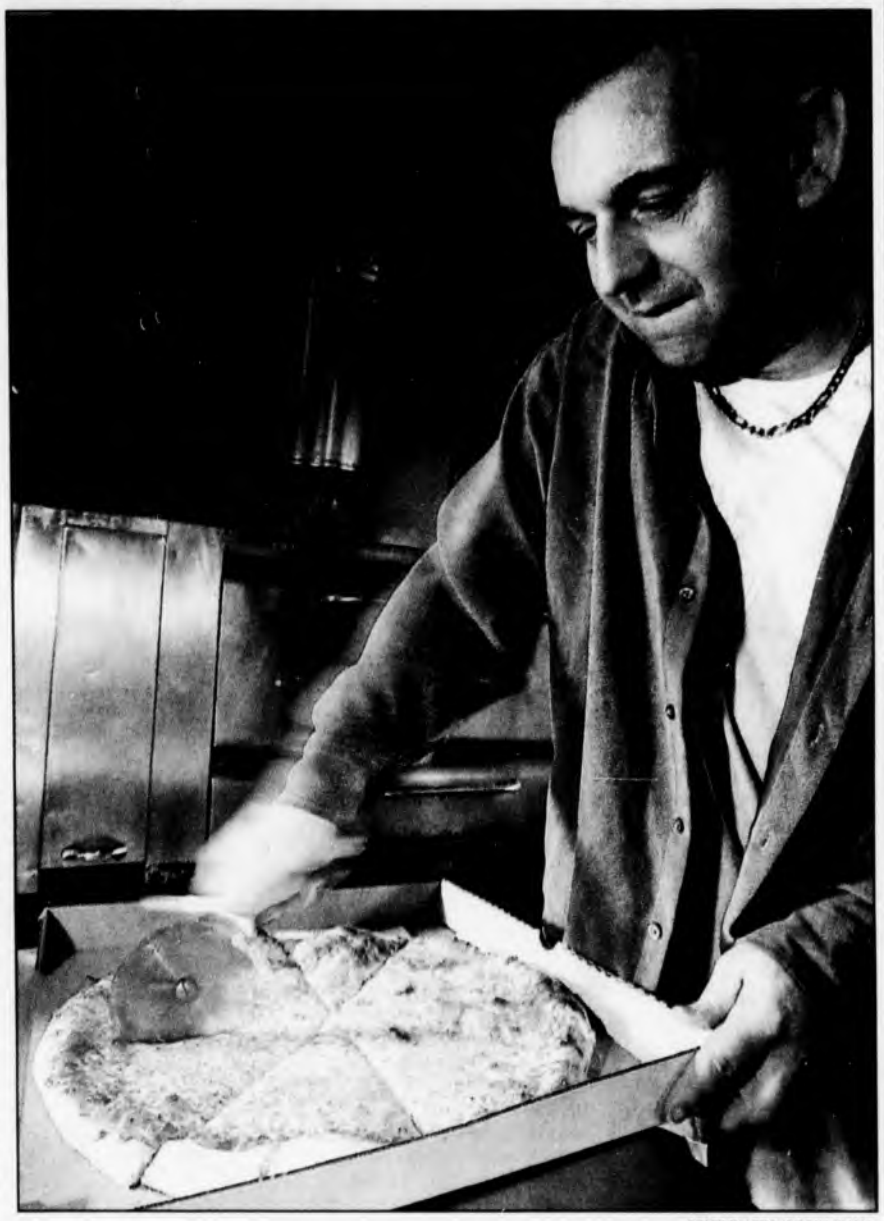
A $6.99 side order comes with three of those monster meatballs.

What has really put Good Fella's on the map, with several regional awards, is its pizza. In 2005 it was named Boston Best pizza, it won the Summer Sizzle Cookoff 2007 and a Community Newspaper's Reader's Choice Award. What makes it so special?

"I think it's the love I put into it," says Armstrong. He offers specialty pizzas that go beyond cheese and pepperoni. The best-selling "Taranto" pizza is topped with marinated grilled chicken, broccoli, tomato and a roasted garlic béchamel. The "Pescara" is loaded with grilled shrimp, artichoke hearts, roasted red peppers, asparagus and roasted garlic aioli.

"It's something different and you know you're getting something good," says Armstrong.

Good Fellas opened in 2004 as a joint venture with Armstrong and his brother, Patrick. Now, Armstrong is going at it alone but he has 26 years of experience in the restaurant business to support him. He's worked as a chef at the Flying Fish Cafe at Disney World serving celebrities like Mariah Carey and John Stamos. He was the executive chef at Campari's in North Chatham and at the now closed Casa Del Rey in Hingham.



"I just enjoy cooking," says Armstrong, "I always find myself back in the kitchen."

Last summer, Good Fella's added a 30-foot deck with seating to the building and offers fried seafood from May to September. They've brought back delivery Thursday through Sunday and are willing to cater parties.

When he arrived in Cohasset in 2004 he didn't know anyone but his landlord, now he counts families all over Cohasset and many of the supportive business community in the village as friends.

"It's good to be back," says Armstrong, "I'm definitely in Cohasset for awhile."

Good Fella's Pizza is open six days a week, Tuesday through Sunday for lunch and dinner..

Their medium, Mike Quadrato, said he felt the voice was an older gentleman who believes the Town Hall is his domain.

While in the actor's dressing room behind the auditorium stage, Kondracki got a huge spike on a K2 meter, a device that pick up on changes in a room's electric magnetic field which is thought to be connected to paranormal activity. As soon as Kondracki saw the spike on the meter, a nearby video camera battery went completely dead.

It's unclear who the ghost (or ghosts) of the Town Hall could be. Given the older portion of Town Hall has served myriad purposes since being built in 1857 including a theater, a private school, a movie theater, a basketball court, a ballroom, a jailhouse and, of course, a building for town departments, the ghost could have been a part of any of those activities. Town historian and archivist David Wadsworth can shed no light on the possible identity of the Town Hall ghost.

"I don't know where the story (of a ghost in Town Hall) came from," said Wadsworth, "people hear something about it and it becomes a legend."

But, theories abound from the ghost hunters, the medium and people in the community on who the haunting could be — a disgruntled prisoner in the basement jail cell or the victim of a hanging, a long-time janitor, school headmaster or a beautiful actress.

Ghost hunters

Kondracki, 25, has done investigations in private residences, public buildings and graveyards in Connecticut and Massachusetts. He lives in Enfield, Conn., while others in his team are based in western Massachusetts. He found the Cohasset Town Hall in a listing of haunted places on the internet (www.theshadowlands.net). The detail explained there was possible poltergeist activity, particularly in the basement area, which once served as the town's jail.

"A true poltergeist is a rarity," says Kondracki. Poltergeists are troublesome, noisy ghosts often manifesting themselves with doors slamming, strange knocking, or similar unexplained events. With his interest piqued, he called the Town Hall to seek permission for his team to investigate over a weekend.

When Kondracki called the Town Manager's office he reached administration assistant Jennifer Oram. A fan of the SciFi's Channel's "Ghost Hunters" series along with her son, Oram had a knowledge of what Kondracki meant by a paranormal investigation. With permission she scheduled them to come this past weekend.

Kondracki has been ghost hunting for about a little more than a year, but he's passionate and committed to it. Although always somewhat interested in the paranormal, it wasn't until his aunt, a psychic, passed away in August 2006 he started his ghost hunting. His aunt had told him he had a special gift but he was too young to understand it.

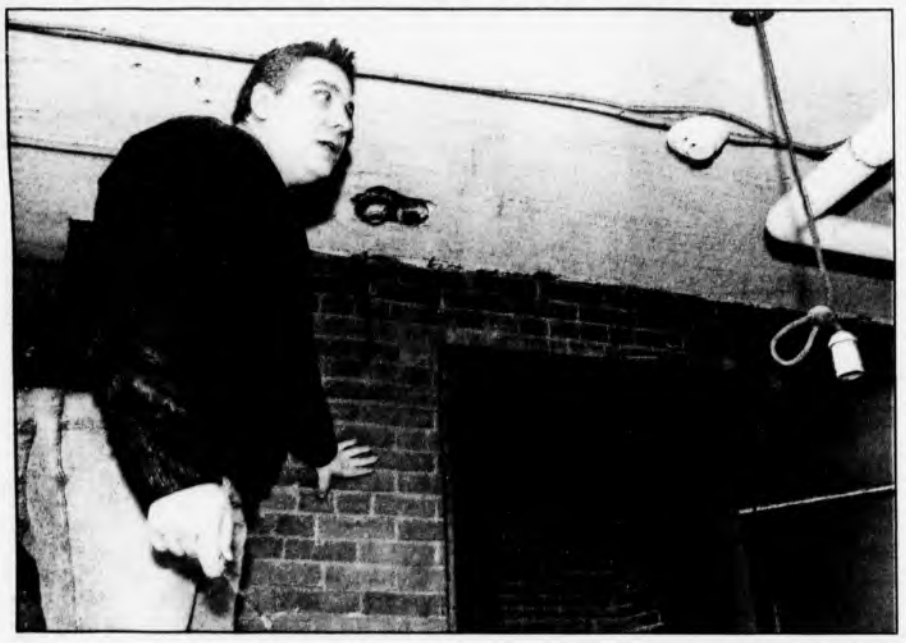
"I can see and bring out spirits," said Kondracki, who considers himself a "sensitive"— a person who can feel a ghost's presence, and often their emotions, "ghosts and paranormal like to respond to me, it's crazy."

He can't explain his ability, but what he has encountered so far has only propelled him to continue investigating the paranormal. He has devoted nearly all his free time to ghost hunting. He started two groups: Ghost Hunter Investigations and then, Enfield Paranormal Society.

"I'm in this to convince people that ghosts are out there. I want to teach people the paranormal and ghosts are real," said Kondracki, "there is an afterlife and maybe people will have a better ease of dying."

While skeptics doubt him practically at every turn, Kondracki is unwavering and unashamed in his beliefs. His Jeep Grand Cherokee is plastered with "Ghost Hunters" on the side. He is truthful at job interviews when they ask him of his other interests. He wears his "Enfield Paranormal Society" t-shirt out and about. He is willing to talk to anyone about paranormal activity and doesn't turn down any investigations. He offers his services without charge and will often drive hours to an investigation, like he and his crew did this past weekend.

"I wouldn't change this for anything in the world," said Kondracki. He's been able to convert six non-believers into believers over the past 13 months, including his mother and grandmother, "if I can convince a non-believer to believe, I've done my job."



While the reference to the 80s movie "Ghostbusters" is nearly unavoidable, Kondracki says he doesn't mind the reference to the iconic pop culture movie, "if people want to know us by a well known movie that's okay with me."

Pat Martin, host of the Comcast local cable television show "Our Town," tagged along with the Enfield Paranormal Society members all weekend. She has hours of videotape from the two nights of investigation she plans on turning into an hour-long television show and Martin plans on proposing a television series for Comcast's CN8 station.

Enfield Paranormal Society says Town Hall is haunted

FROM GHOSTS, PAGE 8

Methodology

Ghost hunting is a high-tech endeavor with infrared cameras, digital audio recording devices, video cameras, and electromagnetic field recorder (K2 meter). However, the most important piece is the human element.

"I approach it as if I'm intruding on their space. I'm just a guest," said Kondracki. Having the right attitude and tone in your voice is imperative, "if you introduce yourself, explain why you're here, you tend to get a better response."

When trying to pick up EVPs on a digital recorder, Kondracki will ask questions when he senses a presence. Some of the questions he may pose to the ghost are who are you, why are you here, and did you die here. He waits about 20 seconds between questions. He's had experiences where every question was answered.

He brings a small group with him on investigations, typically around five to six people. People interested in going on an investigation can send in a request from the Enfield Paranormal Society's website.

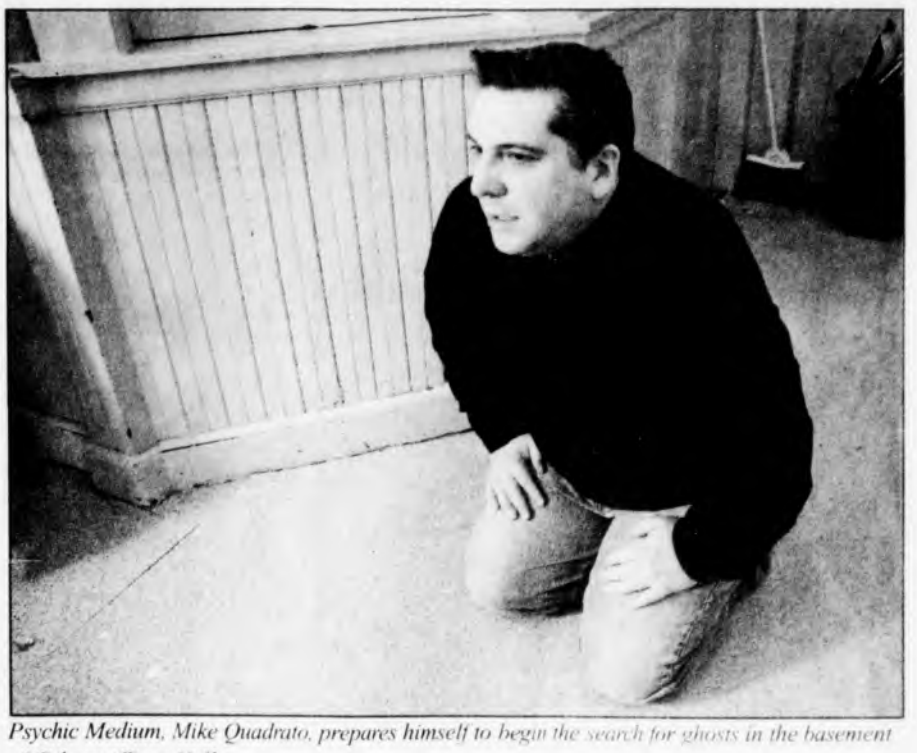
"I take it serious, I don't bring 15 or 20 people," said Kondracki, which makes it more like a haunted house than an investigation. To the Cohasset Town Hall investigation he brought medium, Mike Quadrato, lead assistant Tammy Kraft, technology specialist Jay Grundstrom and Kondracki's cousin Kevin Koropatkin.

He does not recommend investigating alone and "never say you're scared." Ghosts feed off the fear, says Kondracki.

Renovations

The old portion of Town Hall is on the cusp of some major renovations in the next year. An historical architectural firm is currently investigating the Town Hall on a much different level, determining what kind of renovation is necessary and desired for this integral piece of town history.

David Farrag has been heading up the Town Hall renovation committee for the past year. The committee plans on seeking Community Preservation funds at the upcoming Town Meeting.



When Kondracki heard about the possible renovations, he warned the Town Hall could see increased paranormal activity.

"During renovations ghosts can really start letting you know they're there," said Kondracki. As he feels at least one of the Town Hall ghost considers the Town Hall his domain, he might take action to keep it just the way he likes it. The last time the Town Hall was renovated (not including the addition in the 1980s) was in the 1920s.

Farrag isn't too concerned with the interference of a ghost in upcoming renovation, but knows the renovations will cost a significant chunk of money.

"If there are any ghosts, I want them paying rent," quips Farrag.

Cohasset's ghostly haunts

Maritime Museum

Cohasset's Maritime Museum, once Samuel Bates' ship chandlery on Border Street, is reputed to have been haunted by a ghost for some years after it was moved to its current location on Elm Street in the Village. Not long after the Maritime Museum opened to the public, its curators began to hear pacing footsteps coming from the upstairs office. During a meeting of the Historical Society downstairs in the Maritime Museum, the entire board witnessed the footsteps. A ghost hunter and author, Hans Holzer visited the museum and deduced the ghost must be John Bates, the last of the Bates family to own the building. John Bates was likely unhappy with the building's move from the harbor.

It's been said that the ghost of John Bates left the museum in 1972; perhaps satisfied the museum was a worthy use of his old chandlery. Since David Wadsworth has been the museum's curator since the early 1980s he has never heard the footsteps.

The Enfield Paranormal Society wrote to the Historical Society to investigate, but were told the building was too cold during the winter months (it doesn't have heat). The ghost hunters are interested in returning to Cohasset to investigate the ghost of John Bates when the weather gets warmer.

Minot Light

The tall granite lighthouse standing off the coast of Cohasset wasn't the first Minot Light. Built in 1848 to 1849 the first Minot Light was a lantern room atop nine legs driven into Minot Ledge. In a severe April 1851 storm, the lighthouse toppled into the sea taking with it two lightkeepers, Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine. Wilson reportedly swam to Gull Rock off the glades in Scituate but did not survive the night. Antoine drowned in the storm before reaching shore.

During storms fishermen have reported seeing the ghost of Joseph Antoine standing on ladder outside Minot Light yelling "keep away, keep away."

Cohasset to read together

Library kicks off second annual program

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"A truly good book teaches me better than to read it. I must soon lay it down, and commence living on its hint. What I began by reading, I must finish by acting."
— Henry David Thoreau

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is once again harnessing the power of a book to bring the residents of Cohasset together. Next week, the library will kick off its second annual "Cohasset Reads Together" initiative — the beginning of eight weeks of events, discussions and lectures.

The 2008 Cohasset Reads Together program follows on the heels of last year's "One Book One Cohasset" program. Over the summer, a book selection committee consisting of library staff, school representatives, Town Manager, trustees and Friends of the Library representatives got together to discuss the most appropriate book choice. Deciding two books were better than one, they chose a classic and a contemporary with similar (and complementary) themes: "Walden" by Henry David Thoreau and "A Walk in the Woods" by Bill Bryson.

"We are excited to present a literary program that brings members of the Cohasset community together to read and discuss great literature and to explore the environmental themes exemplified in both books," says Library Director Jackie Rafferty. Environmental issues have gained town-wide interest marked by the formation of Sustainable Cohasset, a private group and Alternative Energy Committee, a town committee.

"These groups are working hard to identify and implement solutions to environmental and energy challenges that impact the local community and that have profound effects on the environment," says Rafferty.

"Walden" is a narrative following Thoreau's two-year stint in a log cabin beside Walden Pond in Concord, Mass. He uses his experience in a life of simplicity to expound on greater issues of wealth, money, nature, and spirituality.

"A Walk in the Woods" gives a 21st century perspective on America's cultural and geographical landscape as witnessed from hiking the Appalachian Trail.

One is an esteemed classic, already found on the high school reading list, and the other a highly acclaimed, contemporary narrative. The selected books are connected through their examination and celebration of the American wilderness.

The library hopes both books will not only spark discussion on their own merits, but also open the door for a dialogue for greater environmental concerns.

The varied programming calendar has something for all ages, including a Thoreau impersonator, a lecture on "Greening your suburban landscape," an Appalachian Trail slide show and a live owl show.

To ensure all segments of the population are included in the library's initiative Marjorie Murphy, the Friends of the Library outreach coordinator will lead discussions of transcendental poetry with fourth- and sixth-grade students as well as residents at Sunrise Assisted Living and the Golden Living Center.

Two children's books about the life of Henry David Thoreau: "Henry Hikes to Fitchburg," by D.B. Johnson and "Walking with Henry," by Thomas Locker.

Last spring, the Friends of the Cohasset Library sponsored our first town-wide reading initiative, One Book One Cohasset. The book chosen was "The Last Pick" the biography of long-distance runner and Boston Marathon race director Dave McGilvary, co-authored by Cohasset resident Linda Fechter.

This year, the Cohasset Reads Together is made possible by a $7,500 federal Library Service Technology Act grant awarded to an "On the Same Page" town-wide reading program. The Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners selected Cohasset's application after a competitive process.

"The mission of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is to enrich the Cohasset community by promoting a love of reading and the pursuit of knowledge. Books change lives," says Rafferty, "We read in order to enjoy and appreciate good writing, to be swept away by a good story, and to learn about our world. Beyond reading for sheer pleasure and learning, books often inspire us to take action."

Rafferty offers a quote from Thoreau himself explains the purpose of the Cohasset Reads Together program better than she could herself: "A truly good book teaches me better than to read it. I must soon lay it down, and commence living on its hint. What I began by reading, I must finish by acting."

The kick-off party will be held Sunday, February 10 from2 to 4p.m. at the library. There will be calendars of events, flyers available to take home, granola bars to munch on and event sign ups. The first five people will receive a free copy of "Walden" by Henry David Thoreau and "A Walk in the Woods" by Bill Bryson.

Stormwater bylaw is back on table

Selectmen have a few concerns

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Although one more meeting of the minds on the Stormwater Management bylaw is expected, it looks as if the bylaw of nearly two years in the making could be ready for prime time at the Annual Town Meeting (March 29).

A five-page Stormwater Management bylaw is proposed to establish regulations and organization to the town-wide issue of flooding and stormwater runoff. The draft bylaw was put to the Board of Selectmen on Monday night for feedback and criticism. Board members were quick to recognize the work the Stormwater Management Committee, a Selectmen appointed committee, has put into the bylaw but still felt the bylaw could be costly and tedious for applicants with smaller projects.

"The level of work required for smaller projects is significantly onerous," said Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who solicited estimates from local engineering firms on the cost of to complete the requirements outlined in the current draft bylaw. The estimates ranged from $4,000 to $8,000. For smaller projects, several professional engineer stamped maps and plans are required, including pre- and post-development drainage plan, grading plan, proposed vegetation and hydrolic calculations.

Stormwater Committee's consultant Mark Bartlett of Norfolk Ram said that while Dormitzer's estimates are likely accurate for smaller projects, they did not take into account about 50 percent of the single family re-development projects would already be doing much of what's required because of Board of Health or wetlands protection requirements and permits.

"It's an incremental cost," said Bartlett and would probably be closer to $1,000 for those applicants required to go before other boards.

The stormwater bylaw is significant because it could implement controls on stormwater runoff so increased development will not exacerbate the flooding issues throughout town. The regulations ensure post-development runoff (including peak flow, total volume of runoff and water quality of runoff) for development and re-development project are equal or less than what exists now.

"Most lots get a lot of runoff now, it's that incremental change we're trying to capture" so the stormwater problem does not increase, said Bartlett.

"We have a big stormwater problem in town, part of the reason is nature of soil," said Sarah Charron, Stormwater Committee member, explaining stormwater carries significant pollution into key water ways like James Brook and Jacob's Meadow which ultimate lead to the harbor and Bassing Beach, "we established the regulations based on science."

The bylaw creates two levels of regulation. An administrative review will be required for any construction that will result in an increase of impervious surface area between 500 and 5,000 square feet of land. The lower end (500 square feet) would be about the size of a two-car garage.

Dormitzer said he was concerned best management practices and solutions to stormwater neighbor-to-neighbor issues were being lost in engineering plan requirements for these smaller projects.

"We're looking for solutions, I'd like to see money spent on BMPs (best management practices). Let's go do something with the money," said Dormitzer.

The Board of Selectmen found little fault in the more stringent stormwater permit process involving a public hearing in front of the Conservation Commission for any activity disturbing more than 5,000 square feet or more of land and any undeveloped land. In both cases a town-hired engineer, or "stormwater agent," the fee to be paid by the applicant, will review the plan.

By not having regulation below 500 square feet, Stormwater Committee Chairman Marty Nee said small projects like decks, sheds or a small room addition could be added "without over regulating or adding significant cost to those types of projects."

The bylaw has undergone various drafts as the Stormwater Committee gathered feedback from other committees and the community. Last year, a version of the Stormwater bylaw appeared in the Annual Town Meeting warrant but was ultimately indefinitely postponed. While that version of the bylaw established a full-blown Stormwater Commission, the current draft places the authority for stormwater permits in the hands of the Conservation Commission.

In the bylaw, the Conservation Commission is given the authority to contract the services of an engineer to assist them in the review of both levels of regulation — administrative review and stormwater permit applications.

Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil suggested some language changes including not making a stormwater agent a requirement of the bylaw, instead letting one be hired at the Conservation Commission's discretion. He also agreed with Dormitzer the administrative review may be too stringent and asked the committee to look at streamlining the process for smaller projects.

Selectmen will have to vote to place the Stormwater management bylaw on the warrant on behalf of the Stormwater Management Committee. Ultimately, they will have the final say on the wording in the bylaw.

"If there is an impasse, we can do it our way," said Vanderweil adding, "I think we're almost there."

The Stormwater Committee will meet to discuss and vote on possible changes in the bylaw at Monday, Feb. 11 and will likely come before the Board of Selectmen again before Town Meeting.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Voters: be a party animal

Calling all elephants and donkeys.

The presidential primary lies straight ahead.

It's time to rally behind the candidates you want to see on the ballot in this fall's presidential election.

Republicans and Democrats both hope to see their clout increased by a new party animal arriving on the scene: the independents, who are unenrolled in a political party.

The ranks of independents are swelling to the point where their numbers may swing an election.

In Cohasset, for instance, the 2,804 unenrolled voters outnumber both the Democrats (1,180) and Republicans (1,197).

Independents are a proud and freewheeling breed.

They know their own minds and avoid being entangled in party lines.

They totally conform neither to the Republican or Democratic creeds.

As one independent put it, "I have some ideals from both parties."

On Super Tuesday, Feb. 5, independents who wish to have their voices counted will have to shed their label to cast their ballot.

In order to vote for their favorites in the race for the Oval Office, independents must choose either a Democrat or Republican ballot.

Independents actually have their own unofficial "presidential candidate," CNN's Lou Dobbs, the outspoken spokesman for Independents in America.

Has the time come for independents to find their own voice?

Part of the persona of the Independent is being unencumbered.

Right down to Election Day, Independents are free to choose the mantle of either party, yet this freedom and liquidity actually undermine their voice.

Has the day come when we need an Independent Town Committee, along with the Republican and Democratic Town Committees?

The Presidential primary is generating a lot of voter interest.

Town officials are predicting a healthy turnout, and there are reports of an upswing in the registration of young, first-time voters.

The Town Clerk's office has been busy this past month registering voters and filling requests for absentee ballots.

"We've had a lot of new young people come in to register to vote," said Town Clerk Douglas, including high school seniors and college level students, as well as residents who have recently moved to town, "some were excited because it was their first time voting."

Many of those younger voters who are now away at college came to get absentee ballots to ensure they were able to cast their vote. In total, 92 absentee ballots had been taken out as of Wednesday this week.

So, whatever your political affiliation, it's time to get out and vote for the candidate of your choice.

Tuesday is presidential primary day, as it is in 21 other states across America.

Let's party!

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Forgotten Rocky Lane

TO THE EDITOR:

Kudos to Martha Gjesteby for coming forward with sidewalk concerns. She identified three streets that beg for sidewalks. Please add a fourth, Rocky Lane, and move it to the top of the list.

The MBTA put in a bridge, but denied us a sidewalk. The Town of Cohasset has agreed to build the sidewalk, but claims they must wait until the MBTA moves the guardrails to the proper location. They were installed incorrectly. This is one of several problems with the bridge construction.

Here's an idea – remove the guardrails and put in a sidewalk. It has been almost two years since I first requested that the town not get caught up in the politics of who is to blame. Please do the right thing for the sake of our children's safety and for the aesthetic value of our town. I believe most people would agree that Cohasset pride's itself on its beauty.

I respectfully ask for all residents to raise their voices and request that we abolish the eyesore on the road that leads to the quaint village of Cohasset.

Issues raised tackled one by one

COMMENTARY

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

Currently Dr. Walsh and Chief Hussey have a strong and healthy working relationship and they converse on a regular basis to discuss issues relating to student safety and student and staff behavior.

We're not quite sure where to begin in responding to the letters posted in last week's Mariner referencing many different school topics, among them, our Superintendent of Schools, school safety, the qualifications of our professional staff, the Lewis case and a possible budget override. However, we will try to address many of them.

We will start by stressing that for the School Committee, the School Superintendent and the Administrative Staff of the Cohasset Public Schools, the well being and safety of our students and staff is our highest priority. Four years ago, upon Dr. Walsh's arrival, one of the first things she did was to convene a group of school and town officials to create a five-year Strategic Plan that would become the framework upon which most financial and organizational decisions for the schools would be based going forward. One of the members of this committee was then sitting School Committee member Jamie Williams and another was our Chief of Police, James Hussey. A key point of the Strategic Plan was to create a better working relationship between the School Department and the Police Department. This was the first step toward the creation and approval of a School Safety Plan, Protocols & Procedures for Emergencies and the creation of a Memorandum of Understanding between the two departments that would govern and the delineate each other's role when dealing with school related incidents.

Currently Dr. Walsh and Chief Hussey have a strong and healthy working relationship and they converse on a regular basis to discuss issues relating to student safety and student and staff behavior. None of the School Committee members are naïve to the issues that were brought up by Ms. Williams & Ms. Ayers and Messrs. Altholtz, Kusek & D'Antonio. Whenever we have had a situation involving staff behavior that was of a questionable nature, Chief Hussey has been consulted along with our legal council, and if necessary investigators from the Massachusetts DOE. As we're sure Mr. Altholtz is well aware, many cases involving an individuals rights relative to hiring and firing often place an employer at a severe disadvantage regarding what can or cannot be said when an individual is either terminated or resigns. Dr. Walsh has been extremely candid with the School Committee relative to the events alleged in your letters and we are very comfortable with the actions she has taken. At no time did we feel that any student's safety or well being had been compromised and when faced with any decisions of this nature student safety will always prevail.

Any implication that the School Committee or the Superintendent of Schools has turned a blind eye toward negative behavior by the teaching staff at the risk of students is ridiculous. The letter writers would have you believe that the Cohasset School Committee has had Columbia-like kidnapping conspiracy in place where we have made teachers vanish into thin air. We can tell you that is not the case.

With regard to the Middleboro case, Dr. Walsh took the action that she thought necessary by accepting the resignation of the individual in question. There was nothing to predict the action that would follow by this former employee and to make any statements publicly to that effect would surely have been an act that could have created legal consequences. There is in no way a lack of sympathy or a lack of recognition of the seriousness of the act that was committed, but we are hard pressed to the lay the blame for another person's heinous actions at the foot of Dr. Walsh. The appropriate agencies were informed at each step of the way.

All of the actions and performance we have witnessed from Dr. Walsh in the past four years have been of a very professional nature. We know some would have you believe that we have been an unquestioning passive board supporting Dr. Walsh. That is hardly the case. Dr. Walsh and members of the School Committee speak on a very regular

Train 'punch list' still a priority

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush – The Greenbush Commuter Rail system seems to have settled down. We do get comments from time to time about things that residents see that appear to be unusual. But, usually there is a good explanation for what they saw. There are also unplanned situations such as the lightning that wreaked havoc on some of the crossing signal systems a week or so ago. In this case, the train resorted to manual control at the crossings. This means that the train must come to a complete stop at each crossing. The conductor then has to leave the train and act as a traffic safety guard at the crossing until the train has crossed. Then he re-boards the train and it continues on its way.

We continue to correspond with the MBTA regarding our "punch list" of incomplete items. Recently, we received a copy of Scituate's punch list and it is very similar in nature to ours. When the spring comes, construction season will restart and we expect you will see construction workers finishing up items like the Town Parking Lot.

Other ways that we stay involved with the project and the MBTA, although on a much higher level, is through the MBTA Advisory Board. Their Mission is "To provide public oversight of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority as well as technical assistance and information on behalf of the 175 community members of the Advisory Board and the transit-riding public." We attended a meeting this past week. There appeared to be many members who were looking forward to the presentation that was to be made by MBCR (Massachusetts Bay Commuter Railroad Company, the Greenbush and other commuter rail lines operator) at the meeting. Unfortunately, at the last minute the MBCR could not make the meeting. So, they are scheduled to present at the next meeting. We'll keep you posted.

Little Harbor Water, Sewer & Storm Drainage Project – To continue a little more about project background, what is being done and why?

First, we'll review a bit of terminology. Sewer pretty much speaks for itself. Sewers carry sanitary waste from our homes to a facility where that waste will be processed to eliminate the pathogens and other microorganism nasties that might cause harm to the general population. Septic systems are also mini-processing stations, but we all know the plight of these around Little Harbor. Storm drainage captures the surface water from our streets and land, collects it and drains it to areas where it is permitted to be drained. Newer EPA rules require this water to be processed, as well, to remove hydrocarbons, salt and sand and even trash that collect from our roads and driveways. So, new systems can no longer just dump storm water anywhere. (Recently, the Water Dept. built a number of rain gardens around town. Rain gardens are essentially miniature processing plants using vegetation and natural soil characteristics to clean up storm water and let it drain naturally back into the ground.) The Water portion of this Project deals with the distribution of potable water used by most of us for personal use, cooking, and various cleaning needs and becomes that agent that carries the sanitary waste from our homes. In subsequent articles, we'll cover more about the project background.

"Slightly used" culvert after removal (corrugated galvanized pipe that had corroded).

Fire truck stationed on Whitehead Road.

We have said that any construction project is loaded with unknowns. Last week, while the contractors were replacing pipes at the intersection of Nichols Road and Atlantic Avenue, they uncovered an old storm drain culvert that looked a bit like Swiss cheese. It was corrugated galvanized pipe that had corroded seriously over the years. There were no plans to replace this storm drain, but it would be crazy not to do it. So the project, after consulting with the Water Commission, replaced it. The included photo shows the old pipe waiting to be removed from its storage location.

Safety First – As we know, for any construction project safety is very important. This project is certainly no exception. The Little Harbor project area has many small private lanes. When construction is underway on these small lanes it is very difficult to get safety service vehicles past the construction work to serve the residents separated by the construction. The contractor has reached an agreement with the Cohasset Fire Department that they will locate a fire detail (an engine with a two person crew) within the "difficult to reach" area. Thus, should any emergency occur, either fire or personnel safety-related, an emergency crew will be right there ready to offer the necessary service. They will be able to deploy a fire hose from their truck or begin medical stabilization procedures until other equipment and personnel can arrive. The accompanying photo shows our small agile four-wheel drive fire engine currently stationed off of Whitehead Road.

The Next Phase and a Reminder – This past week we happened to see the contractor beginning to prep the road for construction for the next phase which will cover Atlantic Avenue and parts of Jerusalem Road. In the photo, the contractor is cutting the asphalt roadway alongside the trench location with a large power saw near Sandy Beach. Notice also, that they have begun to erect a black plastic siltation fence along side the road. This is necessary to prevent construction debris from washing into the adjacent marshlands.

Just as a reminder, there will be a meeting of all of the residents who live in the next area to undergo construction. If you live on Jerusalem Road and your house number is from 292 to 475 or if you live on Atlantic Avenue numbered from 17 to 430, please plan on attending. The meeting will be held Saturday, Feb. 2, in the Lower Meeting Room in Town Hall at 10 a.m.. This is your chance to ask questions and find out the details of the construction that will be occurring near your home. It will give you an excellent chance to find out what to expect, how long the work will take and to ask about any other issues that you may have as an abutter to the project.

Temperance lives in Virginia

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Shana McKillop's LaTasca, a Spanish tapas restaurant in Alexandria, Virginia, was doing right fine serving up burritos and paella washed down with a particularly fine sangria.

Then somebody blew the whistle on her.

Her sangria, a blend of red wine and brandy that is served in all the best Spanish restaurants, is illegal and she could face a fine of $2,500 and loss of license.

Seems that in 1934, a year after national prohibition ended, the state of Virginia enacted a law forbidding its citizens from mixing the grain and the grape.

Seventy-three years later, no one knows exactly why.

"I presume that the purpose was to encourage temperance," said Curtis Coleburn of the Virginia Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control. "Adding the spirits increases the alcohol content."

By my calculations that would also make every martini stirred (not shaken) in the state of Virginia since 1934 illegal. As everyone knows, the ideal martini is eight parts grain to one part grape.

We have developed a love-hate relationship with the grain and the grape and it shows up every now and then in the laws of the states and the Canadian provinces.

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth I happened to wind up in the airport outside Edmonton, Alberta, with a three-hour wait for a connecting flight to Toronto.

The first thing one does when faced with a three-hour wait is find the nearest bar and snuggle up to a martini, but there was no bar at the Edmonton airport. This was 50 years ago, remember.

The nearest watering hole, I was told, was a hotel about a mile down the road to Edmonton. I arrived in a squealing of taxi brakes at about quarter after five to find the bar closed.

Don't worry, a man who was waiting outside the door told me. They'll open at six. Bars in Alberta followed the old English law of closing for an hour to give the working man a chance to go home before he blows his paycheck.

Another time, I checked into a hotel in Austin, Texas, to find that the bar was a club for members only. Don't worry, the desk clerk told me. When I checked in I became a club member for the rest of my stay.

Yet another time, I flew from Chicago to Davenport, Iowa, then a beer-and-wine-only town on the Mississippi, to catch a train to Keokuk. Of course, I went into the bar across from the station.

The back bar was lined with bottles of beer. I ordered a Jack Daniels Black Label, the trendy drink in our crowd that year. The bartender reached under the bar and produced it.

Sure it was illegal, he explained, but if he didn't then the business would simply go across the river to Moline, Illinois, an economic move that was winked at by Davenport authorities.

In our own state of Massachusetts, 50 years ago, one could not sit at the bar on Sunday, a law enacted, I was told, so union waiters would have jobs bearing drinks to tables and booths.

Reader feedback on water quality

SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JOANN MIRISE

The best part about writing is the feedback I get from readers. Whether positive or negative, it creates the kind of critical thought and dialogue that I believe is at the root of a sustainable civilization. It's what separates us from plankton and tree bark. We can reason, emote and act.

Many people from all over wrote to me in response to a recent article, which extolled the importance of choosing tap instead of bottled water. The common theme was "I get it. Bottled water takes a huge toll on our environment. But have you ever tried (fill in the name of the town) water. It's terrible!"

I hear you. The first year I lived in Cohasset, the water department released findings that trihalomethane, a byproduct of the disinfection process that is linked to cancer, was at a higher than acceptable limit. Not good.

The water department solved the trihalomethane problem, though the solution created another issue: high manganese levels in some homes. In large doses over time, manganese is linked to neurological health issues, and it turns our water brown. Not exactly an appealing choice to quench our thirst or launder our clothes. Again, not good.

After attending one of the water department's public meetings, I was assured that the commissioners and staff labor intensively to respond to issues. From rain gardens to new facility technologies to hiring professional tasters from the California wine country to assess our water's palatability, those at the helm are on it. With the intention of staying a step ahead they are, however, continually challenged.

From what I observe, maintaining the balance necessary for high quality drinking water seems to be a moving target. Some of that has to do with natural processes. The very attributes that make Cohasset so beautiful – its location, topography and large watershed – also make its water supply high-maintenance. The other part of the balance, however, has to do with unnatural processes. Every time we dig, develop, dump, use chemical sprays and over-water we directly affect the supply and infrastructure. Therefore, it's not just the water department's problem, it's our problem too.

For many of us, it has been easier to ignore our role in the larger issues and instead take the easy route of buying filters for our homes. But how do we know if the filters we buy are even doing their job? And what about those households that can't afford to buy and maintain a filter? And what happens to the non-humans that don't shop for filters? Aquatic and wildlife depend on clean, safe water supplies as well. Is the intricate ecosystem on which we depend being irreversibly threatened because we are focused on ourselves as opposed to the greater good?

In the same way that buying organic produce doesn't eliminate pesticides, and purchasing recycled paper towels doesn't protect our forests, buying water filters does not better our water supply. We can't shop our way to a safer, more sustainable world. We must, instead, work together with the community as the focus, to create true and lasting solutions.

While I believe that we still need to green our personal lives, my focus is shifting toward the collective movement. For someone from one of the "me generations" (somewhere in the midst of Baby Boomer, Gen X and Gen Y) that so fervently perfected hyper-individualism in America, coming together does not seem to come naturally. The case for community however, is proving to be too compelling. Historically, many of the big changes that positively affect our daily life have occurred because of a communal movement or group pressure that catalyze policy change. Think food labeling, pesticide regulations, clean air bills and seat belt requirements. Recently, China's State Council put a nationwide ban on plastic bags. In one fell swoop an estimated 37 million barrels of oil will be saved a year, and the positive environmental benefits will be immeasurable. With efficiency and scope of this magnitude we can't afford to not come together.

This means, for starters, I am going to begin locally by following the water department's recommendations for water quality protection measures, and participating in more of the decisions affecting our water. I am going to sign up for the GreenStart program that was highlighted in the Jan. 25, 2008, issue of the Mariner. Only 240 more families need to sign up and the town gets a solar array for the library offering not only free energy but a learning experience for the community. Also, I'd like to get behind the Greenway project which will connect many of our neighbor towns with walk and bike paths thus providing alternative transportation options that are safe and enjoyable.

I've got my eye on some state, national and worldwide movements as well. After all, why not think big.

Independent Film Night – The library will show the independent film "Adam's Apples" at 6 p.m., on Thursday, Feb. 21. Free admission and refreshments provided by the Friends of the Library. Ivan is an unusually optimistic preacher who takes in convicts to help around the remote, rural church he ministers to. His newest "helper" is Adam, a vicious neo-Nazi anxiously serving his community service time so he can return to hell-raising. Asked to set a goal for his stay, Adam sarcastically answers that he'd like to bake a pie. Ivan cheerfully takes that statement at face value and puts him in charge of the parish's pride and joy: the only apple tree in the vicinity. Grasping the extent of Ivan's crazed, preternatural determination to look on the bright side of everything, Adam decides to shake Ivan out of his rose-colored world. Danish with English subtitles. 94 minutes.

New Audiobooks – Don't have time to sit down and read? Try listening to books on CD. It's a great way to revisit classics such as "The Jungle" by Upton Sinclair, "The House of Seven Gables" by Nathaniel Hawthorne, "Animal Farm" by George Orwell, "The House of Mirth" by Edith Wharton or "Islands in the Stream" by Ernest Hemingway. After many years of Wednesday evening meetings the board knows this will be an adjustment, and will make every effort to make this a smooth transition, and accommodate any conflicts this change may cause while they transition to Monday evening meetings.

Nuclear energy renaissance needed

COMMENTARY

R. MURRAY CAMPBELL

The U.S. has not built a new nuclear-generating plant for many years, but other countries have, especially in Asia...

Renewables and nuclear energy are not alternatives to each other, we need all we can get from both, in addition to conservation, to reduce pollution and greenhouse effect from fossil fuels and our bondage to foreign oil. The efforts of our Renewable and Sustainable Energy Committees are commendable, and complementary to the broad issue of ensuring sufficiency of reliable electricity. Our demand for electricity continues to increase in step with GDP; increases in efficiency (conservation) are offset by ever new uses for electricity, and by switching energy usage from non-electrical to electrical.

Although the U.S. hasn't ordered a new nuclear plant for some years, there are 104 U.S. plants generating 19.6 percent of U.S. electricity, and 439 nuclear plants in the world, generating 16 percent of the world's electricity, accumulating 12,500 years of operating experience, and thus contributing mightily to mitigation of greenhouse gases, global warming and pollution. Unlike fossil fueled plants, the wastes are contained and isolated. Although permanent nuclear waste disposal is a somewhat intractable political problem in the U.S., the technical solutions are well developed. Implementation is no big deal compared with what is necessary to cope with many other problems of the industrialized world. In time, we probably will retrieve and reprocess much of the waste to recover the energy still available in it, and to transmute by irradiation much of the long-lived waste to short-lived waste, and to make use of other valuable elements in the waste.

The U.S. has not built a new nuclear-generating plant for many years, but other countries have, especially in Asia, and 34 are currently under construction outside the U.S., and many more planned. During this period, much progress has been made in design, and also in the performance of existing plants, here and elsewhere. The U.S. licensing process has been greatly improved, and several new reactor plant designs already have been pre-approved. About 27 applications to construct and operate new nuclear plants in the U.S. are expected in the next two years.

The economics of nuclear generation, including "external costs" of fuel mining and processing, and of payments to the fund for permanent waste disposal, are far more favorable than oil, natural gas and biomass fuels and about the same as coal. But the effluents from these plants are not contained, as are the products of nuclear generation, and so their environmental "cost" is difficult to measure and is not included. Whatever the relative economics and availability of nuclear and renewable energy sources, renewables and nuclear are not alternatives to each other. We will need all we can practically get from both to satisfy our ever-growing electricity demand, (despite conservation) while reducing the environmental impact of fossil fuels, especially if electric and hydrogen vehicles catch on as a means of displacing imported oil for vehicle propulsion. (Hydrogen production uses electricity, no matter which process is used. And electricity for vehicle battery charging is far less expensive from central generating plants than from small on-board gasoline engines.)

We can no longer rely on our bountiful resources to excuse poor leadership, and sabotage of the national interest by irresponsible and ill-informed ideologues or self-styled "consumer" or "environmental" advocates. We have to emulate the pragmatic realism of those nations not so blest with and spoiled by abundance, such as the Asiatic and European nations who are taking over the leadership in utilizing the peaceful atom. Nuclear energy is here to stay, and will be a major (perhaps dominant) energy source in the future, so better we recognize the realities, understand the issues properly and employ objectivity to overcome myth, weak leadership, false hopes and irresponsibility.

Laws need to change system

COMMENTARY

STEVEN FUSCO

While most teachers are wonderful dedicated professionals, like any statistically significant group, they have a problematic population among them.

Anyone truly concerned about creating a safe environment for their children attending public or private school should focus on the current system for hiring and terminating teachers. In my opinion Cohasset administrators, School Committee and law enforcement have the primary responsibility to make sure our children are safe while they attend school. However, they are forced to work within a very flawed system. The only significant way to properly mitigate the risk to our children is to fundamentally change our laws.

The most significant issue we face today is that today's system allows terminated teachers to move between states or between private and public schools without appropriate oversight. I contacted Rep. Garrett Bradley and Sen. Robert Hedlund about six months ago to see what can be done and they both initially responded very quickly, I have yet to hear back on what options they are considering.

The Globe reported on a nationwide Associated Press investigation published in October: "There were 2,570 educators whose teaching credentials were revoked, denied, surrendered or sanctioned from 2001 through 2005 following allegations of sexual misconduct."

This problem is systemic and not unique to our town or our state. There are 15 states trying to get tougher oversight and punishment to protect their students for this very reason. How big is the problem? There are roughly three million public school teachers nationwide. While most teachers are wonderful dedicated professionals, like any statistically significant group, they have a problematic population among them. The odds are fairly strong that a segment of this population is capable of extreme forms of misconduct. Currently our only real defense, besides normal hiring practices, is something called a Criminal Offender Record Information (CORI) check. During the hiring process the potential school employee is subjected to a CORI check. Massachusetts' law requires:

"M.G.L. c. 71, 38R requires all schools to conduct criminal background checks on current and prospective employees and volunteers, including those who regularly provide school related transportation to students, who may have direct and unmonitored contact with children. CORI must be obtained from the CHSB at least every three years during an individual's term of employment or service."

Unfortunately, the CORI check is flawed and does not provide adequate information. Terminated teachers from other countries, states or even private schools can slip through and be allowed to pass through the system undetected.

Some progress is being made in places like Missouri. A recent Associated Press study showed 87 teachers who had lost their credentials in a five-year period due to sexual misconduct. Missouri ranks 11th among the 50 states in this category. New York Governor Eliot Spitzer recommends automatic suspension of teachers convicted of sex crimes. Maine Governor Baldacci wants to share the names of abusive teachers with other states, unfortunately a 1913 confidentiality law there prohibits this sort of information sharing. Florida's governor endorsed federal legislation to create a national database of abusive teachers and a call-in hotline for complaints. Other states want to increase penalties, expand background checks or broaden their ability to police schools for abuse.

So if you really want to have a positive impact on the safety of our children I recommend you take some of that Mariner editorial energy and focus it on your local lawmakers. Bottom line is we need to do everything we can to mitigate this risk, but it can't be solved without strong legislation and constant monitoring. Please contact your state senators, congressmen and representatives and ask them what they are doing to protect our children. We need change now.

COMMENTARY

LARRY BINGAMAN

Since the State rebate ends on Jan. 31, 2008, after 10 years, customers' water bills will now have to absorb this amount. I would like to explain this in more detail and what affirmative actions Aquarion has taken to extend the rebate.

It has been said that all good things must come to an end. In times of tight state budgets, that saying is truer than ever. For the past 10 years, customers of Aquarion Water Company in the Hingham/Hull District have been receiving a credit on their water bill of about $24.25 per quarter, or $0.27 per day. This is a rebate from the State to partially offset a rise in water rates caused by the Hingham/Hull District Water Treatment Facility being brought online in 1996. It is important to note that the rebate is for the sole benefit of water customers and did not change the water rates set by the Department of Public Utilities.

Since the State rebate ends on Jan. 31, 2008, after 10 years, customers' water bills will now have to absorb this amount. I would like to explain this in more detail and what affirmative actions Aquarion has taken to extend the rebate.

In 1996, Aquarion's predecessor company in Massachusetts, the Massachusetts-American Water Company, brought online the Hingham/Hull District Water Treatment facility to comply with the Safe Drinking Water Act. The facility cost about $37 million and as a result the typical residential customer's water bill increased from about $250 per year to some $600 annually.

To help partially offset this increase, in 1998 Senator Robert Hedlund, Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, and the water company worked together to successfully enact legislation that resulted in Hingham/Hull District customers, along with residents in twenty-one other water districts, receiving a state rebate spread over ten years. Those twenty-two districts are: Amherst, Attleboro (2 grants), Auburn, Bellingham, Hingham/Hull/North Cohasset, Holyoke, Hudson, Lenox, Littleton, Milford, Natick, North Adams, Norwell, Palmer, Peabody, Rockport, Rutland, Spencer, Westborough, Westfield, Winchester, and Worcester.

In 2007, our typical residential customer used about 70,900 gallons of water during the year and paid an average annual water bill of $646. Of this amount, each customer received approximately $24.25 per quarter from the State shown on the water bill as a "Treatment Facility Surcharge Credit" to, so the net average water bill was about $549 per year.

With the 10-year grant award coming to an end in early 2008, Aquarion began discussing a year ago with State Senator Robert Hedlund and State Representative Garrett Bradley the financial impact to our customers.

We were particularly concerned because we knew that, after seven years, we would be filing for a rate increase in the same year.

Working with Senator Hedlund and Representative Bradley, it was discovered that the State Drinking Water Program provides a greater amount of assistance to communities now than the original grants received by the twenty-two water districts because the cost of interest on debt to finance a project is included as an eligible cost. In mid-2007, Senator Hedlund and Representative Bradley filed Senate Bill 508, An Act Relative To Drinking Water Revolving Fund Equity, to address this inequity by extending the grant to account for the allowed interest paid on debt to finance a water facility in the original twenty-two water districts. Each of these town's residents receives a rebate in the form of reduced water, tax or sewer rates to offset the cost of a water project.

A hearing on SB 508 was held before the Joint Committee on Natural Resources, Environment & Agriculture on June 25, 2007. Aquarion, Representative Bradley, Senator Hedlund, and the Towns of Hingham and Hull provided testimony in support of the bill. It was subsequently reported out favorably by the Environment Committee and referred to the Senate Ways and Mean Committee on October 22, 2007.

Senator Hedlund and Representative Bradley, as well as the 14 other State Senators whose districts are affected by this legislation, have been in touch with members and staff of the Senate Ways and Means Committee. In addition, representatives of Aquarion met with Committee staff members to point out that passage of this bill is a matter of fairness since the original calculations for the rebate did not take into account all eligible costs, such as interest on debt to finance a water or wastewater project. The bill would correct this inequity for residents of the affected towns so they receive the same benefit as those whose town received Drinking Water Funding that included interest costs. And, it eases the cost burden of water projects that have been brought on line to comply with regulations.

To date, the Senate Ways and Means Committee has not acted on the bill.

As a result of this inaction, funding for the ten-year rebate ends on January 31, 2008. Therefore, Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset Aquarion water customers will no longer receive the rebate of about $24.25 per quarter or $97 per year.

Aquarion, along with Senator Hedlund and Representative Bradley, will continue to work as long as it's practicable to extend the rebate for its customers as a matter of fairness. We strongly recommend that customers contact the Senate Chair of the Ways and Means Committee, Senator Steven Panagiotakos (Telephone: (617) 722-1630; E-Mail Address: Steven.Panagiotakos@state.ma.us to ask for favorable action on SB 508.

With customers' support, maybe good things don't have to come to an end after all.

If you have any questions, please call us at 1-800-928-3734.

The recent Middleboro stuff with Ms. Walsh? Junk...forget about it. Real small-picture stuff at the end of the day.

I only see Cohasset from the outside these days, but its funny how cycles repeat, and the cycle of superintendents in Cohasset has been interesting. I'm not sure what human could endure the pressures these people sign up for. Seems as if most do not.

Reading comments from Supt. Denise Walsh and seeing how the school system has been handled, I can only commend her and the supporting committees for having the schools open for business on any day. Is there any angle from which she/they have any immunity? After school finances are torn away, citizens still expect exemplary performance. In this they only kid themselves. The amazing educators the school committee has employed, along with good citizens who support them with opinions and actions, has always been a staple of the great schools. By hook or crook, they seem to make it work. (Wasn't it $700K of pushed-aside bills Walsh faced after being hired? Don't try that at home....) Could they be better? The schools are the water of a fast moving stream of town growth and culture. Bad today, better tomorrow. Good today...don't get used to it.

If achieving federal funding...any funding...to keep the doors open and the heat on, works, it's got to be done. It seems as if more and more communities use IEP's in their schools and other funding mechanisms elsewhere to bring in well-needed funds the tax base cannot provide. It's got to be good funding, as it seems to pay the funding-goal and be worth the legal bills.

In it all you may ask: What kind of system plants educators against parents and their children, as in the recent IEP/parent horror? Answer: The system we have ushered into creation. If the community does not like it, they can make the choices to fund the schools, or not. Is there a law that says people with children in the schools cannot add to the schools funding on their own to avoid the excuse of tax dollars from "the other side" not wanting to pay for it? No, there is just a "principle." Entitlement? Well, the courts sure handled that....didn't they? Do you like what you're "entitled" to? Remember, the result of mediation in most circumstances only makes each party equally unhappy. I'd say that goal was met.

The recent Middleboro stuff with Ms. Walsh? Junk...forget about it. Real small-picture stuff at the end of the day. Let Ms. Walsh handle it....Every saint has a past and every sinner has a future. You don't know all of what's going on anyways, and seldom will without digging, which few do. Concentrate on what you see. Is she doing the job as best as she is being funded? Do the schools work? Does she show up for work every day with all the critics at the ready? (Who wants to enter the "Be Denise for a day" contest?) That's what you're paying her for. Let those without past burdens step forward...although they may be busy watching the Superbowl, with today's model of paternity, Tom Brady, there to also Judge.

Navigate to corruptcourts.us on the web and understand that "corrupt" is not a dig on the people, but the result of poorly operating systems...like "corrupt" software. Many of these are explained on the page and at the resource section of the website. See if the Constitution, as we learned it was, is found in any of the material there. It won't take long. It's very scary.

Is it all any better here in Westfield? Well, bigger tax base ($50 million just for education) and 50's era school buildings, growing population, stressed infrastructure...all the same pretty much...maybe a bit behind Cohasset with upgrades...a daily paper helps track it. Busy paper. Being a primarily working class community, few expect things to occur, but many also realize that part of doing a good job is staying with a hard one, and helping out the other guy as much as one can. No matter what town, rich, poor, or in between, societies are somewhat similar. In the end it's all about "us."

We are more alike than different, but losing precious rights in a democracy we can control. This is a very large problem. Very large.

Good luck to Ms. Walsh, the parents, and the children, and may God bless democracy and Cohasset.

Mark Bell, a former Cohasset resident, lives at 44 Highland View St., Westfield.

Issues raised tackled one by one

COMMENTARY

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

basis. When we have questions or concerns about various school issues, they are asked and addressed and we move forward. Dr. Walsh has brought a great deal of professionalism to our district. She and her staff have put our financial house in order, upgraded our staff with new teaching hires and created efficiencies to make our dollars go further. Our current teaching staff is 100 percent certified under Mass DOE standards and all but two of our teachers are " Highly Qualified" under the No Child Left behind Act. The remaining two are working on waivers as they complete the necessary course work.

Finally, we would like to address Ms. Williams many assertions with regard to the Lewis case and hopefully clarify some of the confusion of this issue. First of all she questions Dr. Walsh's judgment in pursuing the Lewis case in light of the fact that the Lewis's child would be enrolling in a private school in the fall and Ms. Williams also claims that our action was taken to overturn the Bureau of Special Education Appeals decision. Additionally there is a connection made between the costs of the Lewis case and its implication for a possible 2009 budget override and the elimination of two teaching positions. We know there is a lot thrown together here.

First of all, the Lewis case was about a student's rights not a parent's right. Every student under Massachusetts Law has a right to a Free Appropriate Public Education (FAPE). Under the IEP that the Lewis boy was on he was getting FAPE. When Mr. & Mrs. Lewis decided to remove their son from his IEP the decision by the rest of the SPED team was that without it the Cohasset School District would be denying the child his right to FAPE. The order of the BSEA was in the child's favor. The order read, "Cohasset's IEP with modifications, and its extended evaluation provides Ethan with a free appropriate public education in the least restrictive environment. Parent's proposal for regular education with private services will provide Ethan with some benefit but does not constitute a FAPE."

As such, the actions by the Cohasset School Department were reinforced by the BSEA and the subsequent judgment by the Superior Court came to the same finding. The decision as to how to deal with the Lewis child had nothing at all to do with his possible future enrollment in a private school, nor were there budget considerations taken into account. The only decision necessary at the time, by the Cohasset School Department staff, was what action would be best for the child. We hope anyone in a similar situation would want their child's needs placed first.

We are currently working on the 2009 Budget and any decision around overrides or staff reductions are still taking place. Those decisions will be made as a town and in no way are they connected at all with the Lewis case. Any expenses related to the Lewis case would impact the 2008 budget.

The School Committee, the Superintendent and the School Department are working diligently to move the district forward. We believe that the vilification of Dr. Walsh by a minority of residents needs to end. We know Dr. Walsh to be an honest, caring and hardworking person. Having said that, we acknowledge that one person responsible for over 200 employees and all the town's school children can't please everybody all the time. We hope the readers of last week's Mariner will take the time to honestly evaluate all of the opinions and facts expressed last week and this week. If you still have questions, please feel free to contact any of us and we will try to provide answers.

Two pull papers for Planning Board seats

Evans seeks second term as moderator

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

No residents have come forward thus far to run for the Recreation Commission; two seats, one five-year term and one two-year term are available.

While things have been quiet on the Planning Board election front that all changed this week when two candidates pulled papers to run for separate seats on the Planning Board. Charles Samuelson of 6 West Gate Lane will seek the five-year term and Clark Brewer of 262 North Main Street signaled his intent to run for the three-year seat.

Samuelson is a newcomer to town politics, but says he is ready to join in the fray to contribute positively to the town.

"I really believe Cohasset is a fantastic town," said Samuelson in a phone interview, "I want to support the quality of life and character of the community."

Big issues (and development) could be coming down the line for the village, the waterfront and Route 3A in the next five years leading to some tough decisions, he said.

Although a three-year seat is open on the Planning Board, Samuelson said he views the commitment as long-term, "consistency is important," which is why he chose to run for the five-year term.

Samuelson has lived in Cohasset for 10 years and works as an engineering manager at a high-tech firm in Boston. To the Planning Board he looks to bring good common sense, an understanding of technology and the impacts of decisions on the quality of life in Cohasset and extensive business experience including working closely with other committees and departments.

Brewer has been actively involved with the Housing Partnership Committee, currently serving as co-chair. He also served as vice chairman on the Growth and Development Committee that created the Master Plan.

"I've wanted to run for the Planning Board for a number of years," said Brewer in a phone interview, "I've been in Cohasset long enough, about 12 years, to get a longer term prospective on the town."

He hopes to revisit the Master Plan with the Planning Board to review and, if needed, modify the document to make it relevant for today's Cohasset and the future.

As an architect by trade, Brewer hopes to bring a site design perspective to the table, "I have an interest in all aspects of the architectural business, including construction" as well as more long-range planning.

He's worked on projects as large as 1.5 million square feet in Boston and as small as a neighbor's 70 square feet addition. Brewer said he has many ideas on how to bring good development and positive change to Cohasset.

In addition, Town Moderator Daniel Evans pulled papers to seek his second term as moderator.

"I've decided to run again because I've enjoyed having the opportunity to serve Cohasset as moderator. Having grown up in Cohasset, Cohasset is important to me, and being moderator is an opportunity to be involved and hopefully help the town. " said Evans in an e-mail this week.

No residents have come forward thus far to run for the Recreation Commission; two seats, one five-year term and one two-year term are available.

At least two races for seats are possible so far. Two candidates are interested in running for Sewer Commission: Wayne Sawchuk of 432 Beechwood Street and James Dow of 502 North Main Street. While four candidates have pulled papers to run for Library Trustee and there are only three three-year positions available. George Haley of 119 Pleasant St. and Mary Lou Lawrence of 15 Beach St. could vie for a seat with incumbents Rodney Hobson of 31 Deep Run and Sheila Evans of 72 North Main St. Citizens are not considered candidates until they return their papers with the required signatures.

Three-term Selectman Fred Koed pulled papers to run for re-election. Karen Quigley of 27 Clay Spring Road is seeking a seat on the Board of Selectmen. Alfred Slanetz intends to run for re-election to School Committee. Robin Lawrence, a sitting Board of Health member, and Mary Granville, a current member of the Board of Assessors, pulled papers to retain their seats. Town Clerk Marion Douglas has pulled paper to retain her position. Current Water Commission Glenn Pratt will seek re-election as well.

The last day to take out nomination papers is Thursday, Feb. 14. In order to hold a position you must be registered voter of the town.

Positions available for the 2008 town election include: Selectmen — two for three-year positions; Moderator — one three-year position; Town Clerk - one three-years position; School Committee — one three-year position; Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three three-year positions; Assessor—one three-year position; Board of Health — one three-year position; Planning Board — one for five-year position and one three-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Recreation Commission - one five-year position and one two-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Sewer Commission-one three-year position; and Water Commission — one three-year position.

Super Tuesday is Feb. 5

"We've had a lot of new young people come in to register to vote."
— Town Clerk Marion Douglas

able to cast their vote. In total, 92 absentee ballots have been taken out.

Although Douglas is hesitant to make an election turnout prediction, she hazards to say 40 percent will turn out for the primary. The fact Massachusetts is voting on "Super Tuesday" along with 22 other states might bring out more voters, said Douglas.

During the presidential primary, voters will also cast ballots for Town Committee members and State Committee Man and Woman. There are four party ballots - Green-Rainbow, Democratic, Republican, and Working Families, which has no candidates listed.

Of the Cohasset's 5,193 registered voters, 1,180 are registered Democrats, 1,197 are registered Republicans, three are green-rainbow, one is working family and 2,804 are unenrolled. Voters registered to the libertarian or reform parties are not eligible to vote in the election (Cohasset has one voter register in each of those parties).

Voters registered to a particular party must vote for a candidate in that party. Unenrolled voters can arrive on Tuesday and choose the party they would like a ballot for, and then return to unenrolled status after completing the ballot.

Green-Rainbow listed candidates include Jared Ball, Ralph Nader, Elaine Brown, Kat Swift, Cynthia McKinney, and Kent Mesplay.

At this point in time, both parties have no real frontrunner for the Democratic and Republican party nominations. Democrats Clinton and Obama have been neck and neck throughout the primary season. While the Republicans still have McCain, Romney and Huckabee as strong candidates.

Fred Koed, a member of the Massachusetts State Democratic Committee, said the recent endorsements of Senator Ted Kennedy and Caroline Kennedy for Obama may influence a portion of voters in Massachusetts.

"Right now in Massachusetts there are a lot of people in both camps," referring to Clinton and Obama, said Koed, "I'll be interested to see how Massachusetts votes."

But, he's quick to add, "I'm not making any predictions."

The Republican Town Committee is predicting widespread support for former Massachusetts governor Mitt Romney. On Tuesday evening, they held a straw vote with 20 voters at Bia Bistro. Romney received 70 percent of the voters' support (14 votes). Giuliani, who has now withdrawn from the race, received four votes, with McCain and Paul each receiving one vote.

"There should be a good vote for the governor in the state," said Kevin O'Donnell, Republican Town Committee chairman, "I think most are pleased with all the work he did here."

O'Donnell said if Romney stays in the race and the field clears a bit more, "there will be a very stark contrast between Romney and McCain. Romney could shine."

Absentee ballots available for Presidential Primary

Absentee ballots for the Presidential Primary on Feb. 5 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon, on Monday, Feb. 4, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. People who will be in town on Election Day and are able to come to the polls should vote in person. Residents may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Green-Rainbow, or Working Families, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. If a voter is Un-enrolled (Independent) he/she needs to choose a ballot and will remain Un-enrolled after the primary.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Feb. 5 to be counted.

The town will be using the Accu-Vote optical scan system. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of one's choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

Residents who are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast a vote at the polling place, may file a letter from a physician with the Town Clerk, stating that they are permanently unable to cast their vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for the resident to sign and return will be mailed to them by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Bamm!!!

It Was A Hot Summer Day
At The Beginning Of July,
I Was Just Stopping In,
I Was Just Stopping By,
Walgreens That Is,
I Went Into The Store,
Grabbed What I Needed,
And Took A Turn On The Floor!
It Was Then That I Saw Him!
I Was Taken By Surprise!
He Had Wavy White Hair
And Beautiful Green Eyes!
He Had The Most Kind And Gentle Face
I Ever Did See!
I Was Looking At Him
And He Was Looking At Me!
The World Had Stopped!
I Was Frozen In Awe!
I Was Struck By Lightning!
This Man
Was The Most Handsome Man
I Ever Saw!
I Wonder If He Knows,
That Man In The Store,
That I Had Noticed Him In The Past,
About Five Years Before!
From A Distance He Had Caught My Eye,
The Way That He Moved,
The Way That He Smiled!
I Thought There Was Something Special
About That Man!
Now I Know I Must Be Right,
Because My Heart Went Bamm!!!
Does He Know That When I See Him,
My Heart Goes A Flutter,
That I Freeze In My Tracks
And I Melt Like Butter?
Where Is This Man?
Where Did He Go?
What Is His Name?
Does Anyone Know?
Although It Certainly Has Been A While,
Please Let Him Know,
I Want To Give Him My Smile!
And Please Be Sure To Tell Him
That He Has Cast A Spell On Me,
That I Really Want To Meet Him,
And Hope He Wants To Meet Me!!!

Health Notes

'Heartsavers' being trained around town

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

...it is only recently that the new system of layperson training, operation and maintenance has been put in place.

Last Tuesday in the basement of Town Hall, new technology and judicious application of the town's resources provided a demonstration of an overlay of protection and support to everyone in the town that was simply not available two years ago. The occasion was a class in cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR for short) for town employees. Overseen by Chief Bob Silvia, who also provided refreshments, the Fire Department's Lieutenant John Docray and Firefighter Paramedic Dan Smith instructed about 16 employees in the latest methods of resuscitation and the use of the new automated external defibrillator (AED).

For several years now, the Board of Health has been trying to obtain defibrillators to be placed at various critical sites all over town because evidence has shown that early intervention in instances of cardiac arrest has vastly improved the probability of survival in heart attack, stroke, drowning, electric shock and other emergencies. Originally, we bought a number of such devices. The Fire Department also mounted a campaign to raise money to acquire them and numerous citizens donated funds to do so. Defibrillators were obtained, but they were complicated and their use necessitated training, which was not broadly available to lay people. Moreover, to be effective, they required a system of maintenance, periodic checks and oversight, which was difficult to implement. Recently, these problems were solved and the town now has AEDs in every emergency vehicle in town along with others at selected sites all over town, including schools, the library, the Harbor Master's boat, the DEP facilities at the RTF and selected businesses such as Hingham Lumber, which have also bought the devices and been trained in their use.

Although the town's emergency personnel (police, fire, medical, etc.) have been trained in CPR and the use of AEDs, it is only recently that the new system of layperson training, operation and maintenance has been put in place.

The new standards of CPR and the use of AEDs have only been available since 2006 when the American Heart Association published new guidelines for their application and substantially modified procedures for their use. For example, previously, CPR used two, then four, then seven chest compressions to restore heart function. The new protocols require 30 or more and training was often carried out on live subjects. It was determined that the use of biometric dummies was a much more effective training method than human subjects, so on Tuesday, the class had four of the latest dummies bought with grant money and contributions from citizens. Moreover, the class also used pediatric dummies to train the staff on the latest methods for infant resuscitation.

In all, training required about four hours. Two different groups used the dummies; eight in the morning and eight in the afternoon. Training covered both the use of the AHA new protocols for CPR and also the use of the AEDs. Each participant was given an AHA pamphlet and a CD explaining in detail the various steps in the process, and each participant practiced CPR on a dummy until fully proficient. Chest compressions used in CPR require strength and not a little stamina. In addition to which the student must follow a rigorous procedure to ensure that vital steps in the resuscitation process are not missed. For example, it is necessary for the subject to be clear of any dangerous materials, wires, manhole covers that may inadvertently have been electrified, etc. Essentially, the civilian responder becomes the leader of a team that performs a number of functions. In addition to performing CPR, the responder points out and instructs bystanders to call for help (911), obtain an AED and keep the area safe from vehicles, traffic, etc.

Training on use of the AED is accompanied by several aids such as pictorial descriptions of the chest paddles and methods for placing on the victim. The process sounds forbidding, but verbal instructions given by the self-contained machine itself make application of a resuscitating shock foolproof and easy. The machine does all the calculation and work formerly performed by a practitioner; senses the need for shock or lack thereof, and finally applies the proper shock at the right time. Simply amazing.

And so, thanks to emergency service capacity of Police and Fire department personnel headed by enlightened and effective leadership, the town has a peerless system of emergency response that has already saved the lives of many of our citizens and will be effective in doing so into the future.

Political Notes

Logan running for reelection

Paula E. "Polly" Logan of Cohasset — Republican State Committeewoman for the Plymouth-Norfolk Senatorial District — is seeking re-election for a four-year term in the Feb. 5 GOP primary on Tuesday.

From grassroots town offices to the Statehouse to Washington, Logan has mentored and helped elect more Republican candidates than possibly any single figure in the history of the commonwealth. Acknowledged and respected by political activists of all persuasions, Logan was recognized by former Gov. Mitt Romney as "the grand dame of politics in Massachusetts."

Former Lt. Gov. Kerry Healy cited Logan as "the first person who offered me both moral and financial support when I began my political career - something for which I'll be eternally grateful."

Logan's consistent and continual organizational and fundraising skills over past terms have been instrumental in the election of state Sen. Bob Hedlund, U.S. Attorney and former Plymouth County District Attorney Mike Sullivan, current Plymouth County District Attorney Tim Cruz, Rep. Daniel Webster and others.

Getting better everyday

Lady Skippers put stronghold on SSL

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The only thing Cohasset High girls basketball coach John LeVangie asked his team to do this year was to improve everyday.

So far it's working.

Bereft of a single senior, the Skippers are in the midst of an amazing season. At 12-2 overall and 9-1 in the South Shore League, the girls cemented their spot atop the league with wins against Carver and Harwich this week.

"It's good to be in first but it's better after the 20th game of the season," said LeVangie, not allowing his team or anyone else to look ahead. "The kids just come out to play, work hard everyday and are improving."

There were rumblings before this year started from area coaches that the Skippers would be a league contender, but this kind of success from such a young team wasn't expected.

Friday, the girls defeated Carver, 50-37, one preseason favorite to contend for the league. Tori Lehr led Cohasset with 17 points and seven rebounds. Carli Haggerty added 10 points and eight rebounds, while Sammi Lehr chipped in with 13 rebounds.

The Big Three have been immense inside this season and are a big reason why the Skippers have had success. Although the Lehr sisters get the start inside, Haggerty plays equal time off the bench. It's part of LeVangie's eight starters philosophy.

"They all play the same minutes," LeVangie said. "Their chemistry is getting better and better each week."

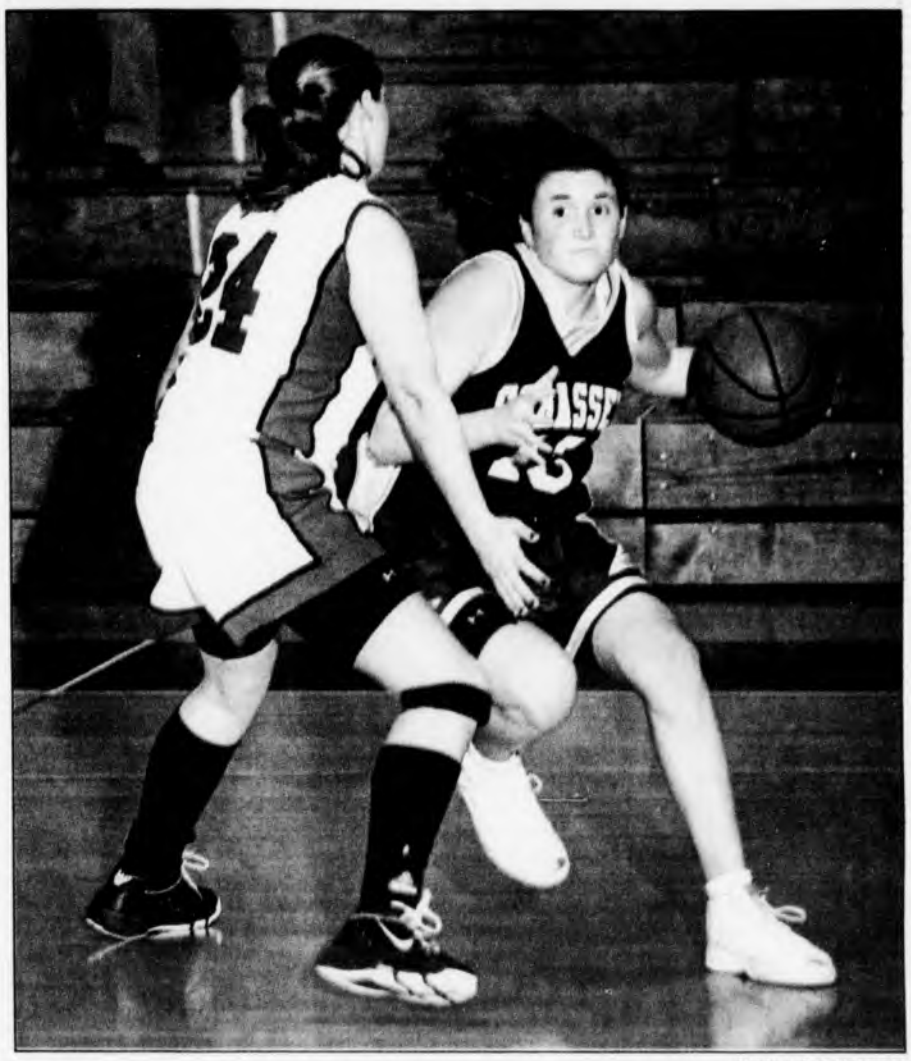
Cohasset trailed 9-6 after the first quarter and jumped to a 20-14 halftime lead against the Crusaders. They held that lead through the third quarter until they pulled away in the fourth.

Once again defense was the name of the game.

"We located their shooters and moved them outside their range," LeVangie said. "We also rebounded very well."

The backcourt pressure on the Carver guards was crucial. Carly Salerno, Kayla Farren and Meredith Kelley continued to play like defensive stalwarts in the press, limiting any kind of a Carver attack.

"Carly (Salerno) and Kayla (Farren) have been running the front of the press for three years and they are really getting an understanding of it," LeVangie said.



"It's good to be in first but it's better after the 20th game of the season. The kids just come out to play, work hard everyday and are improving."
John LeVangie

Cohasset's depth has helped them keep pace and stay in games, and it should be a major factor heading into postseason play.

Samantha Crough, Lindsay Davis, Izzy Franklin and Rachel Fredey have all contributed big minutes and stepped up of late according to LeVangie.

The girls beat Harwich, 42-29, Tuesday night.

Sammi Lehr led with 10 points, Farren added seven and Haggerty came in off the bench with eight points and seven rebounds.

Cohasset High School Hockey Notebook

The Cohasset High boys hockey team defeated Abington/EB, 3-0, Saturday night behind a pair of goals from Chaz Czerkawski, one goal and one assist by Pat Doonan, and a 32 save shutout by Jonny Wade in net.

Cohasset's third line of Andy McKenna (sophomore), Andrew Bell (junior) and Vinny Curran (junior) played well in the win.

"We skated three lines in the win, we usually run two lines but they work hard every single practice," said Cohasset High coach Bob Walsh. "Curran is usually on the fourth line but with Ian Quinlan out, I said 'you want to play and he said, 'yes sir.'

"We had a really good team effort all three periods. Jonny Wade made some incredible saves, once again. Our defense played great zone coverage and remained in control of their emotions."

Abington/East Bridgewater came out and attacked from the opening face off and despite having the Skippers pinned in a number of times, they were able to contain the shots to positions that enabled Wade to see what was going on.

According to Walsh, Wade played like "Jonny 08," referring to the year, rather than "Jonny 07."

"He and I sat down and talked about game prep," Walsh said. "I wanted him to re-focus on how he preps for a game, what he does before certain games when he does well."

Cohasset is now 8-4-2 overall and 7-2 in the South Shore League after Wednesday night's 10-1 drubbing by Norwell. Nothing went well in the game and the Clippers set the tone from the get go. It's a game Cohasset would soon like to forget.

Norwell qualified for the Division 3 South Sectionals with the win earning its 21st point of the year. Cohasset still has 18 points with the loss and needs a win to qualify.

Last Wednesday, January 23, the boys defeated Carver/Sacred Heart's Fighting Crusaders 8-4.

"Carver/Sacred Heart is a hard playing team," Walsh said.

All-Scholastic girls soccer team

Cohasset's Hart, Brophy, Coggins, Kucinski, Lehr and McGoldrick among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top public school girls soccer athletes for this honor.

This is the Community Newspaper Company girls soccer squad comprised of athletes from Taunton, Lakeville, Raynham, Randolph, Avon, Hanson, Whitman, Hanover, Marshfield, Weymouth, Braintree, Plymouth, Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, Abington, Rockland, Halifax, Plympton, Easton, Pembroke, Kingston, Carver, Cohasset, Duxbury, Norton and Mansfield. Cohasset Strikers fall just short in finals

After a choppy start to the indoor season, the U10 Cohasset Strikers ran the table to earn a spot in the U10 indoor finals game. The Strikers began their season at 2-2 but had to forfeit their fifth contest and dropped to 2-3.

With a playoff berth in jeopardy, the Strikers dug deep to run the table and move from a distant fifth place into second. They won their first playoff game handily over the Hingham Rovers which set the stage to face the tough, undefeated Norwell Clippers. Having lost 9-2 in a game earlier in the season, the Strikers knew they had to play their best in order to raise the champion's trophy.

The goalie tandem of Dan Varney and Mathias Loft had played strong all season and would certainly be tested early in this contest. Thomas Durkin and John Harzich provided a strong defensive tandem keeping the talented Clipper forwards in check. Ryan Golz and Mitchell Buckley worked hard in the mid-field trying to spark some offensive strikes. After spotting the Clippers a, 4-0, lead the Skippers future looked bleak.

Then the sparks started to fly.

Forwards Liam O'Connell, Luke Nutting, Mike McKelvey and Deven Varney sprang into action and helped cut the Norwell lead to 4-3 over a seven-minute span. With time running out Cohasset threw everything they had at Norwell. The offensive surges left the Strikers exposed and the Clippers netted two more goals and won 6-4. The Strikers played a hard and well-fought game. Missing three strong players, Cole Joslin, Mark Bodner and Graham Schwant, the Strikers gave it their all.

Flibotte continues to pace Lady Zebras

Cohasset native, Gabriella Flibotte, paced the Groton School Lady Zebras (9-4) to a, 56-49, victory over Thayer Academy (6-8).

Flibotte registered four points before the aggressive Thayer team got on the board. Groton would extend its lead to, 19-10, with 8:16 to play in the first half. But Thayer would answer and close the gap and the teams headed into the intermission with Groton up by, 27-25.

Flibotte hit a three-pointer to extend the Zebras lead early in the second half, but Thayer would get hot from outside and take a, 41-36, lead with 8:22 to play. Groton would go on an 11-3 run, regaining the lead and forcing Thayer to foul in order to stop the clock.

Flibotte would seal the victory for the Zebras shooting 5-for-6 from the charity stripe in the final 30 seconds of play. Flibotte finished the night with 14 points, 4 rebounds, 3 assists and 2 steals.

FROM HOCKEY, PAGE 19

"They just came off a couple of wins and we beat them back in December so we knew they were serious coming into tonight's game. Tony Rota's a good coach and knows how to motivate his players."

A penalty shot early in the third period proved to be key for the Skippers.

"Actually, for us, that was a big turning point in the game since the score was 4-3 after the second period," Walsh noted.

A little more than a minute into the third period, there was a scrum in front of the Carver net and one of the Crusaders covered up the puck while lying on the ice, awarding Cohasset the choice of either a penalty shot or Carver getting a minor penalty.

"I took the penalty shot and had freshman Anders Goetz take it," Walsh said. "Little Goetzie has been hot recently having scored a hatrick in the last game so I gave him the green light. He made a good move on Carver's goalie and gave our team the boost we needed."

After the penalty shot, Carver's first line center, Cal Ciarcia beat Cohasset goalie Jonny Wade making the score 5-4 and keeping the Crusaders in the fight.

But at 8:13 of the third, senior captain Alex Goetz tallied two goals back-to-back, assisted by younger brother Anders, sophomore Brendan Doonan and blue liner, senior captain Frank Wheelwright—giving Goetz a hatrick for the night.

Alex commented on the performance of his line mate Brendan Doonan after the game.

"I'm loving having Brendan on this line," Goetz told his coach. "He's really working hard and we complement each others play."

The final tally for the night came from Czerkawski.

Bill Brett will be at Buttonwood on Feb. 17.

Bill Brett to share photography tips

Buttonwood Books & Toys will welcome Hingham resident and Boston Globe photographer Bill Brett at 2 p.m., on Sunday, Feb. 17, at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, Route 3A. The subject of Brett's talk will be photography. He will share his techniques and give tips to sharpen photography skills. Attendees will learn how to take outstanding photographs and how to bundle them into a collection that deserves a book. Amateurs and professionals will learn and benefit from Brett's proven skills.

Brett started working at The Boston Globe as an 18-year-old part-time photographer. In 1977, he became chief photographer and climbed the ladder to become the paper's director of photography in 1999. He retired in 2001, but continues to capture the local scene as a contributor to the "Party Lines" and "Names" columns. Copies of Brett's books, "Boston: An Extended Family" and "Boston: All One Family," will be available for purchase at the event.

Reservations are appreciated but not required. Those unable to attend who would like to order a personalized or signed copy can call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 or order online at buttonwoodbooks.com.

Dance the night away to the classic rock sounds of the "GR8FLS" (formerly known as the Greatful Dads) at the Red Lion Inn Barn from 8 p.m. to midnight on Feb. 1. Hors d'oeurves and a cash bar will be available.

The event benefits the Cohasset Hockey team. Tickets are $20 available at the door or through any hockey team member or parent.

Electronic music at the conservatory

South Shore Conservatory announces the creation of a new music technology department, under the direction of guitarist/composer Mark Campbell.

The new department is dedicated to teaching the many uses of technology in the music field by offering classes such as Electronic Effects for Guitarists and Orchestra Incognito, a class which uses synthesizers and keyboards to sound like a four-piece rock band, string orchestra or percussion ensemble. The next session of Orchestra Incognito starts Monday, Feb. 4, and is hosted by music technology specialist Tim Butterworth. Students taking music tech lessons will have full access to the conservatory's new group instruction lab.

The department has also begun an internship program with New England Institute of Art. Graduates of the recording arts program will run the Pro-Tools recording studio, which is available for recording projects at a rate of $25 per hour.

Beginning in February, recording interns will host open studio sessions on MIDI sequencing and home recording.

For more information on music technology and other conservatory programs, visit southshoreconservatory.org or call 781-749-7565, ext. 13.

Unsafe ice on Lily Pond this winter

There will be no winter activity on Lily Pond this winter. To reduce the amount of discolored tap water in the distribution system, the Water Department has installed a system of aeration tubes in Lily Pond. The units create a steady stream of tiny bubbles that rise to the surface of the water.

"This aeration system will make all of the ice on Lily Pond unsafe for any winter activity on the ice this year," said Glenn A. Pratt, chairman of the Water Commission. "We may not need to run the aeration system every winter, so this may not be a permanent situation."

Because of the unsafe ice, warnings will be posted and the police will enforce the ban on any winter activity on Lily Pond. The Water Department has discussed this with the Recreation Department, Police Department, Town Manager and Fire Department so all affected town agencies are working together to ensure a safe winter.

The bubbles will add oxygen to the pond water helping to reduce some of the iron and manganese that is dissolved in the pond water, which should help to reduce discolored water in the water distribution system. The aeration system will also improve the ecological state of the pond, according to the Water Department.

Signs are being placed around Lily Pond to warn people from walking on the ice. The Water Department activated the system Dec. 15.

Goodbye first semester!

LIFE AT CHS

Christine Kent

Wednesday's half day will mark a new beginning for students as second semester starts, not to mention the countdown for the end of the year.

"All good things must come to an end."

This week the first semester ended on Tuesday, meaning no more studying 'til the wee hours of the morning for end of term finals! Wednesday's half day will mark a new beginning for students as second semester starts, not to mention the countdown for the end of the year. Many seniors can be heard chanting this mantra, "half way through the school year!" On a side note, some students spiced up their first day of Quarter 3 by attending the long awaited Spice Girls reunion concert....it's about time, ladies. No doubt, Thursday was a rough day for the late night concertgoers not to mention for all the other students, who realized that it was time to get down to scholarly business.

However, Thursday was not completely filled with 90-minute classes and exhausting course descriptions thanks to Dr. Thomae's interesting assembly, Focus the Nation. What kid doesn't love a good assembly in the middle of the day, especially hosted by the always entertaining and enlightening "Doc T", a fan favorite, in addition to students and Senator Hedlund? The topic of Global Warming and Solutions for America were presented at the gathering, which proved to be thought provoking.

Yes, it is true, the CHS Mr. Skipper beauty pageant is approaching and male volunteers (who must be students in grades 9-12) are needed. If the prospect of dawning a snazzy suit and walking down the aisles of the auditorium with a hot chick on your arm doesn't entice you then maybe the prospect of winning a hundred dollars and the title of Mr. Skipper will do the trick! Who can forget that along with the prestigious title comes a shiny new yellow rain suit and pizza. So guys, fine-tune those dancing moves, show off your singing chops and sign up before February 29, 2007...now is your time to shine!

Before I forget, AP students need to bring in their $84 for an AP test by Feb. 29th. If there are any questions or concerns see guidance counselor Ms. Porter.

Now, it is time for the top events of the week:

• Monday, Jan. 28: Sunday's snowfall clearly did not result in a snow day, which is lucky for the varsity gymnastics team who were able to compete against Marshfield. Also, the boys and girls Varsity Alpine Skiing team tore down the slopes in the Mass Bay Ski League-East Division.

• Tuesday, Jan. 29: Bye, Bye, second quarter. Hello new quarter and new teachers.

• Wednesday, Jan. 20: Professional Development Day aka early release for students. Also, the varsity wrestling and hockey teams showed off their athleticism during their away games.

• Thursday, Jan. 31: Focus the Nation captured the attention of high school students, hopefully prompting kids to recycle and conserve energy. Parents channeled their inner teenager for a meeting of the Post-Prom Committee.

• Friday, Feb. 1: A sports filled day for the athletes of CHS. Both the Boys and Girls basketball teams faced off against Hull rivals, while the gymnastics girls flipped in to high gear against Notre Dame. Also, who can forget the carnival that was held at CHS! Kids and adults stepped on up!

Well, that's it for me this week. Have a great weekend!

Christine Kent is a senior at CHS. Her column appears weekly in the Mariner.

Behavioral presentation

The Parent Advisory Council (PAC) will host a presentation, "Putting Misbehavior into Context: Positive Approaches to Discipline," at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 5, in the library of the Osgood School, 210 Sohier St., Cohasset. The Cohasset Public School clinical staff will offer a framework for understanding behavioral interventions across settings. The presentation explores the relationship between contexts such as home, school, and community in behavior change and the impact of this relationship on aspects of student development.

All workshops and presentations are free and sponsored by the PSO and Parent Advisory Council. To be added to the PAC e-mail network for updates, forward your contact information to southshorepac@comcast.net.

Integrated Preschool

Applications for the Cohasset Integrated Preschool are available at both Osgood School and the Student Services Office at Cohasset Middle High School. Children must be 3 years old by Sept. 1, 2008 to participate in the morning class and 4 years old by Sept. 1, 2008 to participate in the afternoon class.

Applications should be returned to the Student Services Office at 143 Pond St., no later than Friday, Feb. 15. The lottery will be held Monday, Feb. 25, and families will be notified by mail that week.

A deposit of $75 is due by Monday, March 10, to hold the space. Tuition is currently $1,500 for the year, which includes four days of 2.5-hour sessions each school week, but is subject to change by the school committee.

Local author gets rave reviews for 'Pulitzer' book

Focuses on journalism prize

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Hingham resident Roy J. Harris Jr.'s latest project proved to be a "life-changing" experience.

Although many books have been written about the Pulitzer Prizes, his discovery that none focused exclusively on the Pulitzer Prize for Public Service Journalism — the highest honor in American journalism — inspired him to write one. "I saw this as a big void in the literature of journalism," Harris said.

"Pulitzer's Gold: Behind the Prize for Public Service Journalism" tells the fascinating tales of the journalism projects that have won the prestigious Gold Medal for public service since Pulitzers were first awarded in 1917.

The Public Service Prize, one of three journalism awards envisioned by Pulitzer, was the only one intended to go to a news organization rather than to an individual.

"Pulitzer's Gold" is the first book to trace the 90-year history of the coveted Gold Medal public service Prize. "I think my book contains important new material for both budding and seasoned journalists, and for Americans interested in a new perspective on the media and on United States history as a whole," Harris said. "My idea was to make this prize-winning journalism come alive, casting it in terms of human drama rather than providing a dry history."

Harris' intent was to craft "Pulitzer's Gold" as an "approachable history full of human drama where the stories come alive for the reader – U.S. history through the lens of Pulitzer Prize public service reporting."

Avid readers, history buffs, and others who would like to learn more about "Pulitzer's Gold" will have an opportunity to do so firsthand on Tues., Feb. 19, at 7:30 p.m. That evening the Hingham Public Library will host a talk by Harris and a book-signing. "I'll be talking and signing away!" said Harris playfully. Copies of the book may be purchased at the event, provided by Buttonwood Books & Toys of Cohasset.

Roy J. Harris Jr. sits down to read the Wall Street Journal where he worked for a number of years before working at the magazine, CFO.

Story of a lifetime

Whenever possible, Harris tries to capture the "Aha!" as reporters and editors discovered that "some seemingly routine assignment was becoming the story of a lifetime," Harris said. "For many readers, that will be the most interesting element of these case studies."

Harris delivers the "story behind the story" compellingly in each case against a rich backdrop of the history of that particular era, whether the World Wars, the Roaring Twenties, the Great Depression, the civil rights struggle, the Watergate scandal, the Vietnam era, Sept. 11, 2001, or Hurricane Katrina.

The tales he tells run the gamut from an interview with Bob Woodward concerning his and Carl Bernstein's investigation of the Watergate scandal to interviews with the editors of the tiny weekly Point Reyes Light in California, which won the Prize in 1977 for its investigation of Synanon, which started out as an anti-drug program but became an armed cult. (The story became one of national interest when, as the Light investigated, one Synanon critic was attacked by a rattlesnake that a group operative had placed in his mailbox.)

Ironically, Harris had been a softball buddy of Paul Moran, the man who had been attacked, 28 years earlier and became reacquainted with him during an interview for "Pulitzer's Gold." This is only one of several unexpected connections Harris discovered while writing his book.

Because the details of Watergate were familiar to many people, Harris asked Woodward what it was like to actually cover the story and about life after Watergate. Holding the actual Pulitzer Prize Watergate entry in his hands at the Columbia University Library was the thrill of a lifetime.

Harris, a journalist himself, found Hingham to be the perfect place to write his 448-page book (including an extensive appendix listing every Pulitzer Prize winner from 1917 to 2007 and 75 photographs).

This project, which came to fruition for Harris after spending almost four decades in the news business, was brought to life at a busy time in his career. He continued to work his regular job in Boston as senior editor of CFO, a monthly magazine with 450,000 subscribers in the world of corporate finance. (Harris also operates the CFO.com website.)

The only exception was a seven-month unpaid break to do intensive research and newsroom interviews outside the Northeast, from Portland, Ore., to New Orleans and Biloxi, Miss., where he interviewed members of the Times-Picayune and Sun Herald news teams. Both newspapers won public service Pulitzers in 2006 for their Hurricane Katrina coverage.

Passion for newspapers

Throughout his 12-year stint with CFO, Harris has maintained his passion for newspapers. That's not surprising since he worked for the Los Angeles Bureau of the Wall Street Journal for 20 years before leaving Southern California in 1996 to work for CFO, taking up residence in Hingham. He is also a former Los Angeles Times and St. Louis Post-Dispatch reporter.

"Besides the beauty of the town and the nearness of World's End, the commuter boat was the big attraction," Harris said. "The quiet World's End area [where Harris lives with his family] turned out to be the perfect place for concentrated writing, especially on rainy days!"

Harris' book is a true "labor of love," a brainstorm following a talk he gave about the Public Service Prizes won by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch at the St. Louis University School of Law in 2002 on what would have been his father's 100th birthday.

Harris' father, also named Roy, was a Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and part of the Post-Dispatch teams that won three more of the Prizes between 1937 and 1948. When the Post-Dispatch won another Pulitzer in 1952, it became the only newspaper at that time to own five Gold Medals.

During the talk, Harris discovered that the St. Louis journalists who attended were not aware that the Post-Dispatch had won five Pulitzers.

This led to his decision to dedicate an entire book to the Public Service Prize, giving proper praise to editors, reporters, photographers, and others who were part of Prize-winning teams throughout the history of the award but previously went unrecognized.

"I felt like I had to write this book because it appeared that no one else was going to do it," Harris said.

While the iron was hot, his wife, Eileen McIntyre, urged him to carry forth with what she agreed was a good idea. "I'd say to him, don't just think about it, do it!"

Harris had his first experience with newspapers as a copy boy at the Post-Dispatch. During summers while attending Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism, he worked as a reporter for the Post-Dispatch. He recalls being sent back to the scene of a fire three times by his rewrite-man father, who sought more information than his son had provided.

Story behind story

During his interviews, Harris spoke with former members of the Post-Dispatch news team who were by then in their 80s and 90s. "I wanted to get the original story behind the paper's Pulitzers," Harris said. "Some of the people knew my dad, and I had known a couple of them when I worked there as a copy boy. I visited one of them in a nursing home. I had heard a little about some of these stories from my dad. It gave me goosebumps."

Avid readers, history buffs, and others who would like to learn more about Hingham resident Roy J. Harris Jr.'s new book, "Pulitzer's Gold: Behind the Prize for Public Service Journalism," will have an opportunity to do so firsthand on Tues., Feb. 19, at 7:30 p.m. That evening the Hingham Public Library will host a talk by Harris and a book-signing. FROM PULITZER, PAGE 26

At the same time, Boston is "front-and-center" in Harris' book due to the Boston Globe's award-winning Catholic priest sexual misconduct stories, which had a Hingham hook, and coverage of the Charles Ponzi scheme in the old Boston Post. Harris notes that sometimes when a controversial story breaks, one with far-reaching ramifications, "careers are hanging in the balance – if the story is wrong, or if it's right."

The book also has other more positive Hingham ties. For example, Harris interviews Hingham resident Fox Butterfield, who was a member of the Pulitzer Prize-winning secrecy-shrouded New York Times Pentagon Papers team in the 1970s.

Other tales center on the New York Times special "A Nation Challenged" section following the Sept. 11 attacks and the Arkansas Gazette's coverage of the school integration crisis in the 1950s.

"After the planes hit the World Trade Center, New York Times reporters had to figure out how to come up with a whole new system of covering a tragedy," Harris said.

The book addresses the issues of the day, such as the decline of newspapers and how to reverse it, the question of whether pursuit of prizes undermines "real" public service, and other interesting subjects.

"Pulitzer's Gold" also illustrates how public service reporting is a point of pride for the America press, whether part of a large daily or a small community newspaper.

So far, "Pulitzer's Gold" has met with rave reviews. Gene Roberts' glowing review of Harris' book says it all. And that's quite a compliment coming as it does from the co-winner of the 2007 Pulitzer Prize for History. "There is no higher calling among American newspapers than public service journalism, and Roy Harris delves into it with flair and expertise," Roberts wrote. "He tells us why and how extraordinary stories were done. It is a must-read for those who want an inside look at journalism at its best."

Window on world

Harris converted a downstairs guest room into an office in preparation for writing "Pulitzer's Gold." He enjoyed watching his border collie, Omaha (who died in 2005), chasing squirrels outside his office window. "This became my window on the world," said Harris. His desk is piled high with books with a Pulitzer theme, and boxes of information about the Pulitzer Prize, filed by year, sit in one corner.

Harris credits his family and friends for offering support on what he refers to as basically a "solo journey" – more than five years of planning, research (including the Pulitzer archives), writing, editing, rewriting, polishing, packaging, and now marketing.

"I owe a lot to a number of librarians, particularly Anne Dalton of the Hingham Public Library for her helpfulness in getting documents delivered and assistance with the microfiche," Harris said. "She was a real collaborator."

Another Hingham resident, Johanna Seltz, helped with editing and proofreading.

"That's all part of the hard job; the fun stuff is in acknowledging all the assistance I got and the friends I made along the way, and showing them a product that, I hope, is beyond their expectations."

And that's exactly how his wife feels about the book. "I love it. I've read it in many different pieces and now I will read it from cover to cover," she said with a smile.

McIntyre said she admired her husband's "passion concerning this book. It was a big part of his life. He would write in the early morning and late at night. He was really caught up in it."

After spending five worthwhile but challenging years researching and writing his book, Harris said sincerely, "I could never be a book reviewer and be tough on an author. As long as they were able to finish it, I'd say, 'That's wonderful!'"

Publishing pioneer Joseph Pulitzer started prize

The Pulitzer Prizes were established in the will of publishing pioneer Joseph Pulitzer. The first Prize was awarded in 1917.

As detailed in his will, a "gold medal costing $500" was to be given each year for "the most meritorious and disinterested public service rendered by any American newspaper." (See related story.)

The medal is now gold-plated silver instead of solid gold, but that hasn't tarnished its image whatsoever. In fact, the Public Service award is the most coveted of them all.

The Public Service Prize, one of three journalism awards envisioned by Pulitzer, was the only one intended to go to a news organization rather than an individual. The other two awards went to a reporter and an editorial writer.

Today there are 14 journalism categories in various areas of news and opinion writing, photography, and cartooning. Including non-journalism prizes honoring work in arts and letters, 21 Pulitzers are awarded in a typical year, subject to more than one prize, or no prize, being given in a category.

The winners are selected by a 19-member Pulitzer Prize Board, which includes a diverse range of top-ranking newspaper journalists and academics from around the nation.

Board members meet for two days in April in the Columbia Graduate School of Journalism's World Room, named for the former New York newspaper once owned by Pulitzer.

Two women doing their part in fight against breast cancer

Five years ago, Kerry Brett embarked upon a journey to raise money for a cause that hit far too close to home: breast cancer. She created a portrait promotion, Avon Breast Cancer Crusade, with little knowledge the far-reaching effect it would have. More than $75,000 later, and with countless faces that have gone before her to tell their story, including family members and close personal friends, she is taking her awareness efforts to yet another level, as she finds with each passing year the stakes are raised higher still.

Brett discovered inspiration in fellow Hinghamite and friend, news anchor Kelley Tuthill. On Dec. 22, 2006, Tuthill was faced with the news of a breast cancer diagnosis. At age 36, having just given birth to her second daughter, Cecilia, the diagnosis was, simply put, most unwelcome. Yet, instead of wallowing in self-pity, Tuthill strongly faced the cancer and chose to publicize her voyage through chemotherapy, radiation and ultimately, surgery and recovery.

Brett was repeatedly overwhelmed by Tuthill's fortitude in the face of adversity. Continuing her ardent strides in the daily grind, Tuthill was stalwart for her girls, she diaried continually on

"I became motivated beyond measure by what I witnessed, as she is truly an inspiration to all."
— Kerry Brett

TheBostonChannel.com to chronicle her journey, gave Boston the news on a daily basis and did it all with style and grace.

"I became motivated beyond measure by what I witnessed, as she is truly an inspiration to all," Brett said.

When asked about her personal experience, Tuthill speaks to others and focuses not on herself. "The treatment for breast cancer can be challenging, to say the least. Many endure surgeries, chemotherapy and radiation treatments. I would not have made it through without the love and support of my husband, my children, my parents, sisters, family, friends and co-workers. My support network was amazing, but I know sadly that is not every woman's experience.

"The Ellie Fund is the sister, the mom and the friends that not everyone is graced with as they fight their battle. The Needham-based charity runs a 'Care for the Caregiver' program that provides transportation to medical appointments, housecleaning, daycare, meals and more free of charge for women and their families undergoing treatment for breast cancer in Massachusetts," Tuthill said.

Tuthill requests the help of every woman and man to "please help (me) help other women who are in need of a stronger cornerstone. The Ellie Fund strives to enable them to focus on getting back the good health so many of us take for granted. Thank you so much."

Now is the time to have a portrait of your family or child created and the reason could not be better. A $150 donation to the Avon Breast Cancer Crusade will purchase a portrait session, which includes one custom 8 by 10 black and white print. Each donation to the Ellie Fund will go a long way to helping someone in need. The event is limited to the first 75 bookings, so call Brett today at 781-749-8205. Checks are to be made out to the Ellie Fund and in the memo section of the check put Kelley for Ellie. This promotion is fully tax-deductible.

Alluring Alone Time in New Hampshire: Notchland Inn

By Tim Jones

The Notchland Inn in Hart's Location, New Hampshire's smallest town, defines "romantic."

The place is surrounded by mountains - no other buildings in sight, no TV, no Internet, no radio, no cell phone service. There's little to distract you from the person you love, my sweetheart and I found.

Eight comfortable, beautifully decorated, very quiet rooms - all but one with a wood-burning fireplace - offer exquisite privacy. Some of the five suites add whirlpool tubs.

The inn's candlelit, five-course dinner is a leisurely gastronomic adventure, accompanied by an excellent wine list. Breakfast, too, is an unhurried delight.

If you can peel yourself away from gazing into the eyes of the one you adore, the inn has a quiet library and a game room filled with old-fashioned board games and a jigsaw puzzle always in progress. The music room has CDs and a piano. An outdoor hot tub for guests is located in a gazebo by a running brook.

If you need still more diversion, snowshoe and hiking trails lead from the door into the White Mountains National Forest, and all of the civilized distractions of North Conway are a few miles down the road.

But if our experience is any indication, you'll likely find that once you've cocooned yourself in the luxurious solitude at Notchland, you'll want to do little more than pay serious attention to each other. That's romance.

Bed and breakfast rates are from $225 for deluxe rooms and from $275 for suites. Add $35 per person for the five-course dinner. Call 800-866-6131 or visit www.notchland.com.

Romance by the Sea in Maine: White Barn Inn

By Greg Reibman

If the White Barn Inn in Kennebunkport, Maine, has a specialty, it must be pampering.

My wife and I went to the White Barn to celebrate our anniversary and anxious to explore the Maine coast - including the seaside town's quaint shops and attractions. But the moment we saw the blazing fire and chilled bottle of Pommery champagne waiting for us in our suite, we weren't in a hurry to go anywhere.

Our room, one of seven "junior suites" in the former 19th century country estate, blended the luxuries of a modern condominium with colonial trimmings. A comfortable queen bed sat in its own niche with upholstered headboard, piled with a sumptuous white down duvet and mountains of pillows.

The gorgeous granite bath featured his/her vanity sinks and a deep two-person whirlpool tub. You could enjoy the fire or the TV from the tub or from a small seating area. The suite also featured a separate granite shower room sporting a steam shower with numerous body sprays and bench seating.

When we did leave our oasis it was to enjoy the gourmet dining and extensive wine cellar, which have gained the inn, a member of the prestigious Relais & Chateaux Association, its acclaim.

Chef Jonathan Cartwright does his magic in a former barn, now outfitted with rustic furnishings that contrast nicely with the delicate service.

Guests can choose the four-course prix fixe meal ($93 per person) or the six-course with wine pairings ($135) from a menu swimming with local seafood selections. The inn's signature dish is an out-of-the-shell lobster with coral sauce.

The inn also boasts a full-service spa. We did eventually find time to watch the waves crash against the nearby icy shore from the comfort of our car.

During the month of February, the White Barn Inn is offering a special Valentine's romance package, which includes accommodations, dinner, champagne and custom butler-drawn bubble bath for two, starting at $266 per person, per night. Call 207-967-2321 or visit www.whitebarninn.com.

Keeping Cozy in Vermont: Rabbit Hill Inn

By Tim Jones

"I want to live here," sighed my girlfriend, Marilyn, as we settled into the Cedar Glen room at the Rabbit Hill Inn in Lower Waterford, Vt.

It was a very nice room, with a loveseat nestled in front of a gas fireplace, a two-person Jacuzzi, a queen-size four-poster bed and braided rugs covering the wide pine floors.

All 19 guest rooms at Rabbit Hill are uniquely furnished; some larger, some smaller, most with fireplaces, some with Jacuzzis, all cozy and perfect.

As inviting as our room was, however, the public rooms were even more so. These include the Snooty Fox Pub, open for inn guests only, and a pair of comfy living rooms with fireplaces for contemplating and couches for cuddling and reading.

Nearby attractions include a stroll in the tiny village of Lower Waterford, snowshoeing on the inn's private trails or skiing at Burke Mountain. After a day skiing we grabbed wine and snuggled, feeling we deserved a chance to sit and do nothing.

Soon enough, though, we were called to dinner in the dining room. Intimate is the right word here. The food is memorable - dishes like tuna puttanesca followed by tournedos of beef tenderloin Bordelaise with a potato-cheddar-apple gratin, grilled portobello strips and baby Brussels sprouts. Yes, it tasted as good as it sounds, and the dining experience (by candle and firelight, of course) was relaxed and delightful.

We came back from dinner to the bed turned down and candles flickering by the Jacuzzi. Do you think that sounds like an invitation to romance? Believe me, it most certainly is.

A two-night Romantic Vermont Getaway package includes chilled champagne, an intimate dinner one evening, afternoon tea and candlelit breakfast daily, and a romantic music CD to bring home. From $519 per couple. Call 800-762-8669 or log on to www.rabbithillinn.com.

Romance returns at Newport's Cliffside Inn

IN NEW ENGLAND

Stephen Jermanok
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

I was absorbing the details: "Beatrice led a repressed life, forced to leave the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts at the age of 18 because the Turners did not want their daughter to paint nude models."

"When she was seen with a suitor on the Cliff Walk, those same parents locked her in her room of this house."

Wow, this was some juicy, Gilded Age gossip, I was thinking as I chomped down another scone lathered with lemon curd and listened to gregarious innkeeper Paul Archambault tell of artist Beatrice Turner.

It is teatime at Newport's Cliffside Inn, the circa-1876 Victorian home once owned by the Turners. The house is a virtual shrine to the legacy of Beatrice, who would never marry and instead devoted her time to painting. After her death, she was featured in a 1950 Life magazine article, "Lonely Spinster Paints 1,000 Portraits of Herself."

Some of those portraits are seen in the parlor, hallways and 16 guest rooms of the inn. Indeed, her wide-eyed melancholy stared at me through afternoon tea.

My wife, who had joined me for a weekend getaway, was eating this up, along with a piece of quiche. You would think the former home of a repressed spinster would not be the ideal romantic getaway spot. Yet Beatrice's early adult passion seeps into rooms, like the Governor's Suite, with a four-poster king-size bed, wood-burning double-sided fireplace, whirlpool for two and unique 1890s multi-nozzle shower.

With the spirit of Beatrice in mind we headed in the morning to the nearby Cliff Walk, the 3½-mile gem of a trail perched above the sea. In the summer months, this route is crowded with tourists admiring the sloping lawns and backsides of the summer "cottages" the Vanderbilts, Whitneys and Astors built at the turn of the century. But in winter, we passed only one dog walker as we took in the expanse of the mansions and the sea. Very inspiring for romance.

The afternoon tea spread at Newport's Cliffside Inn.

A blood drive will be held from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 3, at Memorial Middle School, 81 Central Ave., Hull. It only takes about an hour and one small pinch to become a hero to someone in need. Anyone 17 years or older, weighing 110 pounds or more, and in good health may be eligible to donate blood. For more information on donating blood, call 800-448-3543 or visit www.newenglandblood.org.

Perfect for the part

Maureen Keiller steps into spotlight

By R. Scott Reedy

Maureen Keiller knew the minute she read the script for "The Little Dog Laughed"- currently being presented by SpeakEasy Stage at Boston's Calderwood Pavilion - that she just had to play the role of Diane, the agent willing to do and say anything to take her young movie star client and herself to the top of the Hollywood heap.

"I read the play for the first time in the StageSource office and I immediately thought the part of Diane was perfect for me. The language in this piece is so much fun. Diane gets to say some horrible things in some wonderful ways, especially when she is trying to protect her client with 'the slight recurring case of homosexuality.' Diane is delicious and ruthless at the same time. She will stop at nothing to get what she wants," explained Keiller from her home in Hull last week. "I don't know if it is possible to actually like Diane, but you have to admire her drive. She has a strong need to be on top and she plays to win. The way I see her, she is someone who was always interested in Hollywood. She probably started out somewhat naive, before realizing that playing it nice would get her nowhere. Now her armor protects her inner warmth."

The role was originated off-Broadway by actress Julie White two years ago. White again played the role, and took home the 2007 Tony Award for Best Actress, when the Douglas Carter Beane comedy moved to Broadway the following season, with East Bridgewater native Tom Everett Scott as the up-and-coming movie star. Around the time that White was picking up her Tony, Wellfleet Harbor Actors' Theater and SpeakEasy Stage were exploring a collaboration that was intended to bring the show to both the Cape and Boston, and Keiller was discovering Diane.

"My initial audition was actually in Wellfleet. Fortunately for me, I stayed involved even when the plans for the Wellfleet co-production were dropped."

Playwright Beane has acknowledged writing Diane for Cynthia Nixon ("Sex and the City"). Nixon ultimately passed on the off-Broadway run to instead take a role in the Broadway production of the Pulitzer Prize-winning "Rabbit Hole," which won her the 2006 Best Actress Tony Award. White - an Elliot Norton Award winner for the 2004 Huntington Theatre production of "Bad Dates" - then beat out many other actresses for the part. Competition was no less intense in Boston where insiders say A.R.T. favorite Karen MacDonald looked likely to don Diane's power suits, before she decided to stay on her home turf for "Copenhagen." Keiller knows she went up against some heavy-hitters, but believes it was all worth it.

Maureen Keiller

"I feel very strongly about this production. Our director, Paul Melone (SpeakEasy General Manager), is wonderful so all of us involved knew from the very first read-through that this entire experience would be a good one."

And a significant experience, too, for Keiller, who has previously played mostly smaller roles.

"Most of my roles are supporting so this is a breakthrough for me in that Diane is such a big part and this production also marks the first time that SpeakEasy will be in the larger Wimberly Theatre at the Calderwood," says Keiller, a three-time IRNE (Independent Reviewers of New England) award winner who has previously appeared at SpeakEasy in "The Women," "Almost, Maine" and "The Wild Party," and in "A Streetcar Named Desire" at the New Rep in Watertown.

A Connecticut native who studied theater at the University of Connecticut, Keiller's current success helps balance some earlier career missteps that began when she left college early to become a New York actress.

"I don't know what I was thinking, but I went there without any real plan. I was living in a one-bedroom apartment in Brooklyn with five other young actors. One day, I went on a cattle call audition for summer theater roles in musicals like 'Grease' and 'Godspell.' Literally hundreds of very talented, polished performers showed up and I was there without even a resume or a headshot. I was so out of my league that I left the audition in tears and went to the nearest payphone to call my sister. I just gave up right then and there and moved home to wait tables in a restaurant."

In 1984, Keiller relocated to Boston and before long she was a hairdresser with a steady clientele at a downtown Boston hair salon. A decade later, however, Keiller decided it was time to perform again and she became the lead singer for The Twisters, a cover band, that developed a loyal South Shore following with weekly gigs at the old Hosea's in Pembroke. In 1999, Keiller married attorney Patrick Miehe and the couple now live in the Allerton Hill section of Hull. Contentment at home gave Keiller the confidence to return to performing.

"About the time I started singing with the band, I also took an acting class to help me overcome my fears. I booked my first commercial and I went on stage for the first time in years in 'Psycho Beach Party' at a tiny little theater in Cambridge. I had an amazing time and I knew, once again, that acting was for me."

With small roles in feature films like "Fever Pitch" with Jimmy Fallon and Drew Barrymore, and the upcoming Kate Hudson and Dane Cook release, "My Best Friend's Girl," which is set to open in September, Keiller has just enough time to do her own hair these days. Soon she may even need her own agent, but perhaps one not quite as intense as her current character.

"In a way you want someone like Diane on your side, but personally I can't relate to people who are that tough."

(The SpeakEasy Stage Company production of "The Little Dog Laughed" will be at Virginia Wimberly Theatre in the Stanford Calderwood Pavilion, 527 Tremont St., Boston, through Feb. 16. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-933-8600 or go online at SpeakEasyStage.com.)

Movie review

Woody has a (familiar) 'Dream'

Cassandra's Dream (B+)

Film Review
AL ALEXANDER

Uncle Howard (Tom Wilkinson) startles Ian (Ewan McGregor) and Terry (Colin Farrell) with a personal request.

Woody Allen's latest morality tale, "Cassandra's Dream," is very much the European version of "Before the Devil Knows You're Dead," as brothers desperate for cash enter into a pact with deadly consequences.

While not nearly as accomplished as Sidney Lumet's much-praised Oscar contender, it's considerably less off-putting thanks to a pair of appealing performances by Colin Farrell and Ewan McGregor, well cast as siblings with wildly divergent moral compasses but identical desires for quick-strike riches.

They hit the jackpot when their stinking rich uncle (Tom Wilkinson) from the States drops in on them — with the kind of timing that only happens in movies — seeking a most unpleasant favor in exchange.

True to the title, a reference to the Greek goddess of doom, this bit of immoral quid pro quo is headed for a very bad place, turning brother against brother in a suspenseful, twist-filled framework that's more Hitchcock than Allen.

Allen fared better with a similar earlier effort, "Match Point," but given the sorry state of his recent comedies, "Cassandra's Dream" almost seems refreshing simply because it doesn't stink.

It's also nice to see Allen being less predictable and more open to change, like his decision to forgo his usual jazz-tinged scores for one by Philip Glass. The move to Europe, where each of his last three films were shot, also seems to have rejuvenated the auteur, albeit out of necessity after his well of American investors ran dry.

Never, though, has he worked with a cast minus a single American actor. It's a bit disorienting at first, but a decision you wind up applauding, given the caliber of the performances by his three male leads.

They keep the thing afloat, but sometimes just barely, as Allen's moralizing becomes almost as predictable as the plot. Hitchcock he's not. But he is a competent storyteller, never failing to hold interest, even when the story puts credulity severely to the test.

What's most interesting about the plot is how closely it follows "Before the Devil Knows You're Dead," with disparate brothers, one of them slick and amoral, the other gullible and honest to a fault, suddenly finding themselves in need of serious cash; a need so severe they'll literally do anything to get it.

Of the two, McGregor has the more charismatic role, playing Ian, the proverbial player who's all talk and no cash, a liability that becomes dire after he falls for a beautiful, worldly actress played by newcomer Hayley Atwell. He's the epitome of sleaze, but McGregor infuses him with so much charm, no matter how duplicitous it might be, you can't help empathizing with him.

It's Ferrell, though, who walks off with the movie, delivering a much-needed reminder of the actor he used to be before stumbling through a succession of flops from "Miami Vice" to "Alexander." As Ian's younger brother, Terry, a successful entrepreneur with a wife (Sally Hawkins), two kids and a devastating gambling habit.

Even when Terry's ahead, he can't quit, a foible that lands him 90,000 pounds in debt to very unsavory people, a dilemma that allows Ferrell to take Terry through a litany of emotions from elation to utter despair. The actor excels at showing the guilt that fills every inch of Terry's fragile soul. You believe the fear and desperation in his Terry after he and Ian make a Faustian deal with their loyal but not terribly ethical uncle.

Wilkinson plays the latter with such a quiet ease that when he floats his unsavory request to his desperate nephews it's genuinely shocking. More of him and less of Ian's relationship with Atwell's less-than-compelling two-bit actress would have been preferable, but even in his all-too-brief time on screen, Wilkinson manages to make quite an impression.

I wish I could say the same about "Cassandra's Dream." It's derivative and instantly forgettable. But it's no nightmare, either. It's a Woody Allen film, for gosh sakes, and that should still mean something, even if it is less than a dream.

Tequila Sunrise soars with Eagles music

Endorsements from other politicians matter if you're running for President, but if you're a rock band there is no bigger stamp of approval than a rave from the best-selling, most respected magazine in the music industry. That's just what Tequila Sunrise got when "Rolling Stone" described the Nashville-based ensemble as "The Best Eagles Tribute Band on Earth."

When Tequila Sunrise takes the stage at the Company Theatre this week, there will be no mistaking their intent. They will be in Norwell to present the most authentic and completely live re-creation of "The Eagles," one of America's most beloved rock bands.

With extraordinary vocal harmonies and perfect musicianship, Tequila Sunrise is able to capture the timeless music that has delighted fans of "The Eagles" since the early 1970s. The six professional musicians bring a tremendous amount of talent and experience to the stage, having performed with some of the greatest live acts of our time, including Eddie Money, Eric Carmen, Hootie and the Blowfish, Bryan White, Lonestar, Josh Gracin, Sam Moore, and Gary Lewis and the Playboys, to name but a few.

Their extensive all-Eagles play list includes "Hotel California," "Take It Easy," "Lyin' Eyes," "Life in the Fast Lane," "Desperado," "New Kid in Town," and many more.

Tequila Sunrise will be at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, Feb. 1-2. Only limited tickets remain for both shows. For more information, please visit the box office or call 781-871-2787.

Performance has a prayer

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

In "Whistle Down the Wind," the musical from composer Andrew Lloyd Webber and rock lyricist Jim Steinman ("Total Eclipse of the Heart") now at Boston's Wang Theatre, Eric Kunze plays a mysterious stranger who a Louisiana girl comes to believe is Jesus when she finds him hiding in her barn.

"The story is set in a small town in the deep South in the 1950s and it opens at the funeral of the young girl's mother. As the girl, Swallow, is beginning to deal with her loss she stumbles on to this man hiding in her barn. He's actually an escaped convict. When Swallow asks him his name, however, the first words he says are 'Jesus Christ' and she immediately thinks of all of her prayers have been answered," explained Kunze by telephone last week.

Eric Kunze as The Man and the Children's Ensemble in "Whistle Down the Wind," playing through Feb. 3, at the Citi Performing Arts Center Wang Theatre.

This isn't the first time Kunze has been the savior in an Andrew Lloyd Webber musical — or, for that matter, of one. In 2002, Kunze replaced ex-Skid Row front man Sebastian Bach in the lead role in "Jesus Christ Superstar" days before the show opened in Boston.

"I was living in Orange County, California, when I got the call to go into 'Jesus Christ Superstar' on less then one week's notice. I had done the show before so I was somewhat ready and I was first hired as a three-week replacement until they could find another name star to continue the national tour. Finally, they decided the music was the star of the show and three weeks became three years on the road."

Kunze—whose Broadway credits include "Les Miserables" and "Miss Saigon"— now lives in San Diego where he spends his downtime in the real estate business. Having previously appeared in "Evita" and "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," Kunze is happy to be back on tour in another Lloyd Webber musical, this one based on the 1961 feature film of the same name which starred Hayley Mills and was taken from the novel by her mother, Mary Hayley Bell. The musical adaptation of "Whistle Down the Wind" made its American debut in 1996 at Washington, D.C.'s National Theatre, under the direction of Hal Prince. A planned Broadway transfer was canceled and the musical was reworked for a successful West End production in 1998, helmed by Gale Edwards. A subsequent U.K. tour in 2001, under current producer and director Bill Kenwright, featured a restructured book. At Lloyd Webber's request, the new production played a limited engagement in London's West End in 2006. Kunze believes the changes have been for the better.

"It's a story of redemption and special bonds. There are things about my character, The Man, that are not specifically written, but still hint at his past. He may have been unfairly convicted and it is left up to the audience to decide his guilt or innocence. He is a likeable character, but there is always the question of his guilt, especially as he becomes more involved in Swallow's life. She needs to believe that he is Jesus Christ and see that he is redeemed."

While Kunze says changes to the book have made the show stronger, he believes Lloyd Webber's music is its greatest strength.

"This show isn't 'Phantom of the Opera' or 'Sunset Boulevard. It isn't meant to be on a grand scale like those earlier shows. This one has a simple, beautiful story and some beautiful Andrew Lloyd Webber music, with some positively gorgeous, sweeping melodies."

In celebration of the New England Patriots AFC victory and to wish them well in Super Bowl XLII, the producers of "Whistle Down the Wind" have priced all tickets for the Boston engagement, through Feb. 3, at $25 each. For more information, visit the Citi Performing Arts Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston, call 1-800-447-7400 or go online at citicenter.org.

Two towns affected by tragedy

Both boys have Cohasset ties

By Nancy White and Brian Nanos
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Area teenagers, their families and the community at large are still trying to come to terms with the devastating loss of a high school student last weekend.

Family and friends filled St. Mary of the Nativity Church in Scituate beyond capacity Wednesday to say goodbye to Timothy Mahoney, a 16-year old Scituate High School sophomore and athlete, who died in a tragic car crash in Cohasset this past Saturday morning.

The driver of the car, Chris Barrow, 18, remains in the hospital with serious injuries that family members say will leave him paralyzed, but his injuries are no longer life-threatening.

The aftermath of grief has crossed town borders, as both boys had strong ties to both Scituate and Cohasset. Mahoney's father, Frank Mahoney, is a Cohasset fire captain. Barrow's father, Robert, lives in Cohasset.

Teenagers, public safety officials and the community share in the sorrow and disbelief over Mahoney's death. Counselors were available to both Scituate High students and Cohasset police and fire officials this week.

In Mahoney's eulogy, given by his uncle Philip Mahoney, he spoke to the grieving student population. "Stick together. Support each other and remember your friend. Remember that smile and laugh. You were his inspiration, his motivation. You filled his passion for life."

A simple, somber memorial at the scene of an accident on Route 3A just beyond Pond Street has been visited by teenagers all week. Bouquets of flowers have been placed on the side of the road and a number 9 — Mahoney's varsity number — is posted on a nearby tree.

On the Scituate Mariner website more than 100 readers responded to the story about the accident. Many were messages of condolences to the Mahoney family, get well wishes for Barrow and expressions of support for both families.

Mahoney played both hockey and lacrosse for Scituate High and hockey coach Michael Breen says he was well liked by his teammates.

"Just picture a good kid," Breen said, "that's how he was."

The accident, which happened shortly before 1a.m. Saturday morning, is still under investigation, Police Chief James Hussey said. The Massachusetts State Police Accident Reconstruction Team is currently completing its investigation.

Hussey would not speculate on the speed the pickup was traveling or if it flipped over several times before coming to a stop on its roof on the opposite side of the state highway about halfway between Beechwood and Pond streets.

Smoking bylaw change on table

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset could soon be almost completely smoke-free. An amendment to the smoking bylaw is on the table to prohibit smoking in private clubs around town, but the Board of Selectmen wasn't ready to give its support to the bylaw change yet.

While the bylaw will formally regulate private clubs the George H. Mealy Legion Post is the only one that has not voluntarily banned smoking on its premises. Other private clubs which include the Cohasset Yacht and Sailing clubs, Bancroft Hall and all church organizations.

"I don't think we have to discuss the negative effects of smoking," said Robin Lawrence, a member of the Board of Health, "we need to protect employees from second hand smoke. We all know secondhand smoke is not innocuous."

However, Selectman Paul Carlson was hesitant to establish regulations for private clubs, "I'm inclined to let them run their club as they want it. If a majority of members don't want a smoking, they can handle it without a bylaw."

The Board of Health held a public hearing on the smoking bylaw amendment a few weeks ago and heard from

Cohasset likes Obama, Romney

53 percent of voters went to polls

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset has always had an independent mind.

While the majority of the state voted for Hillary Clinton, Cohasset voters casting a democratic ballot favored Barack Obama. Like the rest of the state, former Massachusetts governor Mitt Romney got a majority of the Republicans vote in town.

Despite the rainy weather throughout the day, 53 percent of the town's voters came out to the polls. By 3p.m., 1420 voters had made the trip

Planning Board meetings move to Mondays

For the indefinite future, Planning Board meetings will be held each Monday evening. Therefore, the Planning Board will meet Mondays, Feb. 25, and March 3 and 10. The meeting date of Monday, March 24, is tentative.

After many years of Wednesday evening meetings the board knows this will be an adjustment, and will make every effort to make this a smooth transition, and accommodate any conflicts this change may cause while they transition to Monday evening meetings.

McMorris may run for Rec Commission

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Ronnie McMorris of 89 Doane Street pulled nomination papers to run for the five-year seat on the Recreation Commission. As a former Selectman, McMorris is no stranger to town politics. She could not be reached for comment by press time.

The two open seats on the Planning Board each have a candidate. Charles Samuelson of 6 West Gate Lane will seek the five-year term and Clark Brewer of 262 North Main Street intends to run for the three-year seat.

Town Moderator Daniel Evans has pulled papers to seek his second term as moderator.

No residents have come forward thus far to run for the two-year term currently open on the Recreation Commission.

At least two races for seats are possible so far. Two candidates are interested in running for Sewer Commission: Wayne Sawchuk of 432 Beechwood St. and James Dow of 502 North Main St. While four candidates have pulled papers to run for Library Trustee and there are only three three-year positions available. George Haley of 119 Pleasant St. and Mary Lou Lawrence of 15 Beach St. could vie for a seat with incumbents Rodney Hobson of 31 Deep Run and Sheila Evans of 72 North Main St. Citizens are not considered candidates until they return their papers with the required signatures.

Three-term Selectman Fred Koed pulled papers to run for re-election. Karen Quigley of 27 Clay Spring Road is seeking a seat on the Board of Selectmen. Alfred Slanetz intends to run for re-election to School Committee. Robin Lawrence, a sitting Board of Health member, and Mary Granville, a current member of the Board of Assessors, pulled papers to retain their seats. Town Clerk Marion Douglas has pulled paper to retain her position. Current Water Commission Glenn Pratt will seek re-election as well.

The last day to take out nomination papers is Thursday, Feb. 14. In order to hold a position you must be registered voter of the town.

Positions available for the 2008 town election include: Selectmen — two for three-year positions; Moderator — one three-year position; Town Clerk - one three-years position; School Committee — one three-year position; Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three three-year positions; Assessor— one three-year position; Board of Health — one three-year position; Planning Board — one for five-year position and one three-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Recreation Commission - one five-year position and one two-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Sewer Commission-one three-year position; and Water Commission — one three-year position.

BRIEFLY

Small override suggested

There could be a summit of three boards to discuss the upcoming fiscal year budget. Town Manager Bill Griffin suggested the Board of Selectmen, School Committee and Advisory Committee caucus on the 2009 budget to be presented at the March 29 Town Meeting. A tri-board meeting like this has been done in the past and given the tight finances of the town Griffin thought it might be a productive meeting.

Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil asked the board if it would consider a small override request at Town Meeting.

"I certainly don't want an override but if it's in the best interest of the town," said Vanderweil. The other board members consensus was along the same lines — they were willing to consider it. In particular, Selectmen Paul Carlson said the budget for building maintenance was not being adequately funded.

"They are very thinly staffed for all the work they have to do," said Carlson.

North Cohasset water

Last week, Selectman Paul Carlson, Water Commissioner Nathaniel Palmer and Windy Hill Road resident Joe McElroy met with Aquarion representatives to discuss the possibility of Cohasset water supplying water to North Cohasset in the event of another summer drought.

Carlson said Aquarion's initial response was positive, but there are technical and legal issues to wade through.

"If Aquarion is willing to work with Cohasset it could be a great win," said Carlson.

POLICE BEAT

NE Aquarium: seals belong on beach

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Although seals are a fairly routine sight along Cohasset shores – the arrival of one of the animals on the beach triggers calls to the police. In recent weeks, police have followed up on calls about "beached" seals.

After a call last Tuesday (Jan. 29), an officer checked on the seal throughout the night and an employee with the New England Aquarium checked the seal the next morning. Later that day, police were asked to tell people to stay away from the seal.

"Being on the beach is their normal habitat," Police Chief James Hussey said. "However, if someone gives us a call we will go out and look at the seal to see if it is hurt. But if it is just lying there – there is no cause for alarm.

The police have a pamphlet from the Aquarium that explains about seals. "Unlike whales or dolphins, seals are semi-aquatic and are comfortable out of water," the Aquarium states. "Most seals come onto beaches to sleep, nurse or soak up some sun."

The Aquarium says seals are cute but they are wild animals and should not be disturbed. If people get too close, the seal might bite or become upset.

The Aquarium recommends the following if someone spots a seal on the beach:

- Watch quietly from at least 150 feet away
- Keep dogs away from the seal
- Do not offer the seal food or water
- Do not pour water on the seal or try to cover it with a towel or blanket.
- Do not try to make the seal move.

While most seals on the beach are perfectly healthy, sometimes they do need assistance.

"If the sea has obvious injuries, gunky eyes, or looks skinny or underweight, the Aquarium asks that observers note its location, size, coloring and behavior and call the Aquarium's Animal Hotline at 617-973-5247.

It is illegal to disturb seals or other marine animals. Those caught harassing or disturbing seals could face large fines.

Election disturbance

Police said a 42-year-old Cohasset resident would be summonsed to court on charges of assault and vandalizing a campaign sign after a disturbance on Highland Avenue late Tuesday afternoon. The man allegedly grabbed a Hillary Clinton sign away from a campaign worker and ripped it, Chief Hussey said. The investigating officer talked to the victim and other witnesses and determined the campaign worker was not on private property but was on the sidewalk, which is town property. The disturbance did not appear to be politically motivated, Hussey said.

Protective custody

A 40-year-old Canton woman was taken into protective custody last week after police found her sitting in her disabled car and determined she had been drinking.

Chief Hussey said police believe she could be the same woman that Scituate police reported taking off in an intoxicated state in a beige-colored Ford Contour with South Carolina plates at about 3 p.m.

Police answered the call about the disabled car at about 7:10 p.m. the same day.

"It appeared to be the same car involved in the earlier incident," Hussey said. "The woman said the car would not start and the officers smelled alcohol and determined she had been drinking."

Police took the woman into protective custody. She was not arrested for drunk driving because police had not observed her operate the car.

She was brought to the station and her car was towed, Hussey said.

Erratic operation

Although police were not able to locate a Mercedes, that a caller reported as "swerving all over the road" last Thursday (Jan. 31) at about 4:30 p.m. along Route 3A, police do encourage concerned citizens to notify them about erratic drivers.

In this case, there was no plate provided and both Hingham and Cohasset police could not find the car.

Chief Hussey said erratic operation can mean the driver is drunk, having a medical problem, or has taken their eyes off the road for some reason.

"We welcome calls about erratic drivers, as we can check it out," he said.

Parking lot

Parking at Shaw's appears to be risky in terms of cars getting dented or dinged while the motorists are shopping. There have been numerous hit and run accidents reported and enumerated in the police log in past weeks and months.

Last week, a walk-in to the police station reported that he thought his 2006 gray Nissan was hit at about 2 p.m., Friday (Feb. 1). The man noticed the dent to his rear bumper when he arrived home and wanted it logged.

Economic development ready to work

Selectmen approve EDC charter

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The four-page charter includes a vision statement, a four-pronged mission statement and action items, with estimated completion, to accompany each part of the mission statement.

The Economic Development Committee has been no stranger to the Board of Selectmen over the last few months. Since the early fall they have come before the Selectmen on multiple occasions in an effort to establish a new charter to guide them in the upcoming year and beyond.

They left Monday night's meeting with a smile after the Selectmen gave their stamp of approval to the charter—with a few suggestions and changes.

"This new charter is much better than the old version," said Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil to open the discussion. EDC Chairman Peter Brown credited the recent addition of Alain Pinel and his "fresh ideas" for many of the changes.

"We're here to get your blessing on the charter and go to work," said Brown. The four-page charter includes a vision statement, a four-pronged mission statement and action items, with estimated completion, to accompany each part of the mission statement.

The new vision statement was added so the committee members could always remind themselves what they are working toward. However, the Selectmen had some fresh ideas of their own and tweaked the vision statement by adding an additional phrase.

The EDC proposed the vision "to make Cohasset the most desirable place to live, visit and prosper," but the Selectmen were concerned with not including a caveat to not change the character of Cohasset — a reason many people move to and stay in town.

"We don't want to be Beverly Hills, I like Cohasset to be an unknown secret," said Vanderweil. The Selectmen and the EDC brainstormed to come up with additional wording to ensure their efforts were maintaining the character of the town.

The result was "to maintain Cohasset's character and keep Cohasset the most desirable place to live, visit and prosper."

Although the Selectmen did not have other specific wording concerns, Selectman Ralph Dormitzer cautioned the EDC to be sensitive to other established groups in town like the Farmer's Market and Arts Festival, "make yourself a support to something, don't try to co-op them."

Brown said he understood Dormitzer's concern, "we plan to promote and improve as we can," adding there is a lot of new energy with the merchants and a revived Chamber of Commerce that they hope to support and cultivate.

Other items of interest for the EDC were identifying town sewer capacity, particularly for the village. The Sewer Commission has said previously additional capacity for new village development is at least five years down the line, "that's unacceptable." To that end, the EDC requested a Sewer Commissioner be an ex-officio member of their committee.

Before the close of the meeting, the Selectmen appointed a new member to the committee: Tim Chamberlain of 235 Pond Street.

"We're off to a running start," said Brown the Selectmen gave their unanimous approval of the charter and the appointment.

Amendment would ban smoking from private clubs

one Legion member in opposition, they said.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer felt the town owed it to Legion members to allow them to speak for or against the bylaw, "I think we need to listen to both sides on this."

Lawrence agreed, "I think it would be wise to get primary sources on this."

The Legion Post is located at 98 Summer St. across from the Veterans Memorial Park at the harbor. While operated by the American Legion, the town owns the building itself. The town leases the building to the Legion for $1 per year and has done so since just after World War I, said Town Manager Bill Griffin.

"We all know secondhand smoke is not innocuous."
— Robin Lawrence, Board of Health

"We need to protect all employees in the town, not just some of them," said Jim Wells, a representative from the South Shore Tobacco Collaborative. Bartenders at the Legion Post are continually exposed to secondhand smoke, he said.

The Massachusetts Smoke-Free Workplace Law is primarily intended to protect workers from health hazards resulting from exposure to secondhand smoke. Under the state's smoke-free workplace law, memberships/private clubs are exempt when the building is not open to the public or when non-members are not invited guests. This bylaw would not allow smoking under any circumstances.

Cohasset established a smoking bylaw banning all smoking in restaurants and bars in 1998. The bylaw was then amended in 2003 to include all workplaces. According to the bylaw, no smoking is permitted within 20 feet of any entrance.

"It's a slam dunk as far as were concerned," said Steve Bobo, member of the Board of Health.

The Selectmen requested the Board of Health get in touch with members of the Legion that are for and against the smoking bylaw to continue the discussion on the bylaw amendment before making their recommendation.

Regional planners: parking can be beautiful

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Newly installed Town of Hingham parking spaces face the Talbots lot in Hingham Square. Regional planners suggest installing paid meters for prime parking to encourage short-term use.

Acres of asphalt? Multi-story cement parking garages?

Attendees from towns stretching from Plymouth to Holbrook at a regional parking forum in Hingham last week were all in agreement: there is nothing pretty about parking.

However, consultants tried to persuade the 60 people in attendance — including Cohasset's Wayne Sawchuk and Clark Brewer — that parking meters can be beautiful.

Parking spaces have value, experts say, and customers will and should be expected to pay for them.

Pictorial slides of Boulder, Colo. and Stanford University in Palo Alto, Calif. showed how a city and a college could turn parking problems into parking solutions through paid meters, green space and better planning. Other options offered were lots with permeable surfaces and changing zoning to relax parking requirements.

But the key issue remains: will those solutions fly south of Boston?

Although there were no "one size fits all" answers – the Jan. 31 forum at Hingham Town Hall delivered suggestions and provided fresh thinking on an old issue.

Timothy G. Reardon, coordinator for the South Shore Coalition, a sub-region of the Metropolitan Planning Council that hosted the forum, explained the MAPC has been beating the drum for "smart growth."

Smart growth roughly translates into mixed-use development that is environmentally sensitive.

"Most trips are done by car," Reardon said about the South Shore. "We need to deal with the parking issue in our town centers to make sure that parking is not a restraint."

Three consultants provided different aspects of the parking dilemma including the actual cost of each space in a parking garage (ranging from a low of $15,000 to a high of $77,000 per additional space) and the benefits of paid on-street parking, even if that necessitates hiring people for enforcement.

Jim Gallagher of the MAPC told the audience that included town planners, public officials, business owners and interested citizens said parking was a local issue with regional consequences. He summarized the parking issues as:

- Not enough downtown parking

"We need to deal with the parking issue in our town centers to make sure that parking is not a restraint."

— Timothy Reardon, South Shore Coalition

- Parking spilling into nearby neighborhoods
- Too much land devoted to parking
- Whether to charge for parking
- Environmental impacts of parking lots
- How to set up parking requirements

Tom Gallagani, economics, planning and real estate consultant, said charging people for premium parking "incentivizes" them to only stay there short-term and encourages others, such as employees, to find cheaper parking.

Both Gallagani and Jason Schreiber, a planner with Nelson Nygaard Associates, suggested eliminating parking restrictions altogether.

Judy Sneath, who sits on the Hingham Planning Board and is also director of the Hingham Downtown Association, a private organization of businesses and merchants, explained that downtown Hingham is facing challenges. Now that Greenbush construction is no longer a deterrent to shoppers – ensuring there is enough convenient parking for customers is critical for the downtown area to thrive.

She said that there are about 100 on-street spots downtown that can evaporate if used up by 80 postal employees. Hingham's main post office is on North Street, right in the center of the downtown area.

Hingham officials are trying to encourage employees of shops and businesses to park in the newly refurbished Station Street Parking Lot, which is a short walk from the shopping district. Hingham police are also about to start ticketing cars that park over the on-street limits.

Schreiber, the planner with Nelson Nygaard, said enforcement and education are both key. He noted in Pasadena, Calif., the entire community became invested in compliance. Parking meters there have stickers stating meter revenue is dedicated to public improvements.

Parking Benefit Districts can also be established where the merchants can influence how the money is spent and therefore, have more interest in promoting compliance.

There was some discussion on "shared parking," including being able to use town parking in off hours for residents or other businesses.

Wayne Sawchuk, a business landowner in Cohasset, described his dilemma. He is renovating a downtown historic building that will include apartments. However, even though the 166-car town parking lot abuts the back of his property – zoning bylaws preclude his being able to use those spaces. He is considering installing an underground garage with an elevator.

Schreiber, the planner with Nelson Nygaard, said while convenient, installing the garage takes away from the "human interface" and hurts the community.

Hans Dietrich hopes to open a restaurant in the former Settles Glass building at the top of Station Street downtown Hingham. He is looking at a variety of parking options, including leasing space, valet parking, and building an underground garage. One parking space would be required for every four seats, or 25 for a 100-seat restaurant.

Schreiber said the occupancy of parking lots is much lower than most think.

The consultants stressed that building lots for the biggest shopping days of the year – for example the day after Thanksgiving – is a waste of space when much of the lot remains empty at other times.

He said once a parking analysis is done, town officials find out fast that if parking regulations are eliminated – parking can be treated as a shared resource.

The MAPC has copies of the presentations, detailed notes about the discussion on the parking page of the MAPC Sustainable Transportation Toolkit website:

Tanya Bodell lives on South Main Street.

CRA International Inc., a provider of management consulting services and economic and financial expertise, announced that vice president Tanya Bodell has been appointed vice chairwoman of the International Chamber of Commerce Standing Committee of the International Centre for Expertise. The appointment is for three years.

Founded more than 30 years ago, to facilitate international commercial relations, the ICC International Centre for Expertise provides access to experts who can assist with a range of business matters. Expertise may be used in a variety of contexts including: removing uncertainty in business operations; assisting with the amicable settlement of disputes; and assisting in connection with litigation or arbitration. The Centre relies on 10 appointed members of its Standing Committee as well as more than 90 ICC national committees to assist with referring experts from around the world.

"In appointing Tanya Bodell to its Standing Committee, the ICC has selected a talented and insightful leader," said James C. Burrows, CRA's president and chief executive officer. "CRA congratulates Tanya on this well-deserved honor and appointment."

Bodell specializes in various aspects of the energy industry, including the effects of government regulation on profit opportunities, particularly in the areas of competitive markets and environmental policy. She has provided support to companies involved in alternative dispute resolution proceedings and litigation for more than 14 years. She is a Sloan Fellow at MIT, and holds a master of arts degree in public policy from the University of Chicago and a bachelor of arts degree from Pomona College.

In commenting on her appointment, Bodell said, "The ICC has put together a talented team to lead the Centre in its offer of expertise support services in the international arena. Whether proposing experts, appointing experts, or administering expertise proceedings, the Centre provides a critical service to the dispute resolution process. As globalization continues, I anticipate that there will be even greater demand for a neutral international forum where parties from different countries can resolve their disagreements in an efficient way. I look forward to working with the ICC and other members of the Standing Committee to serve worldwide business."

AROUND TOWN

Jennifer Piepenbrink

HELLO

Hello Cohasset. Well, this past week has been a sad one for two families that is for sure. Our thoughts and prayers go out to Frank and Laurie Mahoney, their family and friends as they said goodbye to their youngest son Tim at an age that was way too young. The communities of Scituate and Cohasset will stand by and support you in whatever ways are wanted and needed and all want you to know that everyone is here for you. Life is a treasure that can change so quickly, embrace each day with love, happiness and joy.

We have a number of pieces to talk about in the column this week that recognize some students in a variety of programs and colleges.

DEAN'S LIST

Ryan Ingram, daughter of Linda and Stephen Ingram of Cohasset and a 2007 graduate of Cohasset High School was recently named to the fall dean's list with distinction at Trinity College at Duke University. Nice work, Ryan.

A Cohasset student at Wake Forest University student has been named to the university's dean's list for fall semester, 2007. Congratulations to Virginia A. Spofford on the work put into this accomplishment. I am sure your family is so proud.

TABOR HONORS

Another job well done goes out to Samantha Bobo, who is the daughter of Steve and Heidi Bobo and granddaughter of Steve and Vivien Bobo, all of Cohasset, and a freshman at Tabor Academy. Samantha earned HONORS in her first semester. Samantha's decision to attend Tabor Academy was based on her interest in Marine Biology.

PIANO STUDENTS

South Shore Conservatory congratulates Cohasset piano students Miles Morin and Audrey Kirwan for having placed first and third respectively in Division II of the Conservatory's 20th Annual Concerto Competition. Both students of Hui-Min Wang, Miles and Audrey received trophies and performed in the winners' concert. As a first place winner, Miles received an SSC scholarship. The Concerto Competition is open to all current Conservatory students and is made possible by support from the Mary DeForest Seymour Endowment Fund. For more information, visit www.southshoreconservatory.org.

He is moving to Wyoming and felt it would be to long a commute from there to stay on as Cubmaster. The families that have had boys in Cubs in the last 33 years owe a deep appreciation to Jeff. You can call either Linda Farrag at 781-383-9519 or Merle Brown at 781-383-1625 for reservations.

The Production Team of Co-Directors Lisa Pratt and Lisa Rafferty, Music Director, Mark Bono and Choreographer, Tina Combs-Fabrizio is thrilled with all that this talented local cast of "Joseph" has accomplished thus far. Led by Cohasset resident, Mike Nakashima as Joseph, and Hingham resident, Ann McCoy as The Narrator, their combined musical skills handily deliver performances worthy of professional theaters anywhere. And their supporting ensemble brings some additional Cohasset faces to the limelight including Mark Alves, as the Pharaoh and Laura Coletta, Tara Goodwin, Ashley Howard, Jenna Neer, Jen Piepenbrink and Logan Pratt as the some of the wives. Sharon White will play the "evil" temptress, Mrs. Potiphar. Special Olympics athlete inducted in Hall of Fame

Jessie MacDonald, a Cohasset native, was notified Jan. 29, at the Red Parrot in Hull, that she was inducted into the 2008 Special Olympics Hall of Fame. MacDonald will be formally recognized and inducted at the 2008 Let Me Be Brave Anniversary Gala to benefit Special Olympics Massachusetts, on Saturday, April 5, at Gordon Indoor Track and Tennis Center at Harvard University. The event will be a black tie and sneakers dinner and program highlighting the 2008 Hall of Fame.

MacDonald has been a Special Olympics athlete for 14 years and at one time was a nationally ranked power lifter. She attended the World Games in 2001 and won a gold medal in Alpine Skiing. In 2006 she traveled to Iowa for the Special Olympics National Games and brought home four gold medals in power lifting.

An active athlete and fundraiser for Special Olympics, MacDonald has jumped into the frigid February waters for the last five years at the annual Passion Plunge, Special Olympics largest annual fundraiser.

She also represents Special Olympics South Section as a Global Messenger, a Special Olympics athlete trained in public speaking. MacDonald also assists coaches with younger athletes, organizing of competitions, purchasing of equipment and uniforms.

To top it all off, MacDonald holds a full time job at the YMCA in Hanover.

"MacDonald has taken advantage of the many innovative opportunities that Special Olympics offers. In addition, MacDonald contributes immensely to Special Olympics experience in both sports and heart. Special Olympics Massachusetts is honored to induct Jessica MacDonald into the very prestigious Hall of Fame.

Active parenting course to be offered

First Parish Unitarian-Universalist Church, 23 North Main St., will offer a follow-up parenting course to one that is currently underway. The new course for parents of children 4 to 12, "Active Parenting Now," will be held in three sessions Wednesday, Feb. 27, and March 5 and 12, in the living room of the church. A choice of 9:15 to 11:15 a.m. or 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. will be offered.

Perhaps some parents have all the skills they need, but if the following phrases sound familiar to you, this program will be helpful: "Stop teasing your brother, " "Go ask your father," "One more story, but that's it," "Go to sleep now," "Did you clean your room yet," "Pick that up," and "For the last time, no!"

More than 1,000,000 parents have found "Active Parenting Now" entertaining and effective. It is a two-hour, fast moving three-session, video and discussion- based program that teaches both communication and discipline skills that eliminate the power struggle.

You will learn effective methods to instill courage and self-esteem, create cooperative kids, make responsibility a reality, and develop problem-solving techniques. In short, you will understand your child's thinking. Tell a friend and come have some fun.

First Parish Unitarian-Universalist in Cohasset sponsors these courses with financial assistance available through the Social Service League of Cohasset. The program is written by national parenting expert, Dr, Michael Popkin and will be facilitated by Jan Tedeschi of Norwell, known for her active parenting teaching.

The cost is $100 per person for First Parish members, $120 for non-members and a 25 percent discount will be offered for spouses attending the same program. To register, call Parish Administrator, Sandy Bailey, at 781-383-1100. For more information, visit www.askjantedeschi.com

Boy Scout cubmaster to leave Cohasset

Jeff Forsdick heads for Wyoming

By Nancy White

Jeff Forsdick's longevity in the Cohasset program has given him the unique opportunity to be guide two generations of children.

In 1975, Jeff Forsdick walked into to Boy Scout registration with one purpose — to sign up his girlfriend's seven-year-old son. But he left with another purpose, one that would be a part of his life for the next 33 years. On that fateful day, Forsdick got signed up to be a Boy Scout leader and decades later he is still involved.

"I just fell into it and I've enjoyed it," says Fordick, who has served as "Cubmaster" overseeing the programs for the Cub Scouts, boys in first through fifth grade.

But now Forsdick, a Cohasset native, is leaving his post and Cohasset to move out to Wyoming to be closer to family.

"It's odd to me the hardest thing I'm finding to say goodbye to is the Boy Scouts," says Forsdick, who also is leaving close friends, a "gorgeous" town and a job he enjoys at Hingham Lumber. While he may continue his involvement in boy scouting in Wyoming, Forsdick believes it is his love for the pack more than his love for boy scouting makes his leaving bittersweet.

Forsdick grew up on Red Gate Lane and was a Boy Scout himself, originally in a troop run by the late Mary Jeanette Murray, Cohasset's long-time state representative.

He's had many fond memories and proud moments of boy scouting, "the kids I used to have in boy scouts have grown up to be really good kids," says Forsdick. While he credits the parents for the most part, he says scouting reinforces the good values the kids are learning at home, "it gives them more guidance."

He's had about 10 boys continue on to complete their Eagle Scout badges, "I'm not taking credit, but I'm proud of it."

His longevity in the Cohasset program has given him the unique opportunity to be guide two generations of children. Kids who he mentored when they were in elementary school are now bringing in their kids to join Boy Scouts.

"It doesn't make me feel old, but proud," says Forsdick. It's heartwarming for him to see the close friendships he saw forming in Boy Scouts still exist today.

Boy scouting also offers the opportunity for young boys to get out into the great outdoors, or sometimes as close as their backyard. Growing up adjacent to Wheelwright Park, Forsdick has enjoyed taking the boys on a nature walks through the paths he knows so well.

"I relive my childhood with the kids. Wheelwright Park was my backyard," says Forsdick. Spending time in the outdoors is an important component to boy scouting, but a fading one in everyday life.

"Kids and families would rather google Yellowstone National Park than actually go there," says Forsdick, "all achievements in boy scouting have to do with sports or the outdoors which I think is important."

Although camping trips are typically done until the boy scouts are a little older, Forsdick begins to prepare them in Cub Scouts. They learn basic camping skills like knot tying, how to deal with Mother Nature and survival skills.

He laughingly recalls when nature got the best of him on a camping trip — a tent sagging with rain tore during the night dumping gallons of water on him and his boy scouts, "every time I went camping rain followed."

One trip the cub scouts he annually looks forward to is a sleepover at the Museum of Science. 300 Boy Scouts stay over inside the museum and get to see each of the exhibits up close and personal.

"You learn a lot more that way, it's the only way to see it," says Forsdick.

Other annual events Forsdick looks forward to is the Memorial Day Parade, the Blue and Gold Banquet, Haunted House at Deer Hill and the Pinewood Derby.

The Pinewood Derby has been an evolution of sorts. For years he endured arguments from parents about his judging skills (or, some argued, his lack thereof) at the annual event. Two years ago they invested in a modern aluminum four-lane track that judges the derby cars with results accurate to one-tenth of a second. "I haven't been in any arguments in the last two years," he says with a laugh.

Forsdick says the thought of leaving the boy scouts long before this has crossed his mind, "every year and before every meeting I say to myself, 'here we go again' but the second I'm there I have the time of my life."

A "Going Away" party for Jeff Forsdick is being held at the Red Parrot in Hull on Feb. 12 at 6 pm and the cost is $25 per person. Call either Linda Farrag at 781-383-9519 or Merle Brown at 781-383-1625 for reservations.

Leisa Legge arranges an outfit on a display in her dining room while preparing her house for the Carlisle Collection trunk show.

High-end fashion shopping

Cohasset mom offers personalized service

By Lisa Hennessey
CORRESPONDENT

She will determine which cuts are most flattering, which colors suit your skin, as well as examine your existing wardrobe...

Leisa Legge is warming up for her first trunk show this week, selling elegant, high-end spring fashions from the Carlisle Collection, a New York city-based couture fashion house.

Legge, a Cohasset hockey mom, has recently joined Carlisle as a consultant, a sales position that focuses on highly personalized service. Four times a year, when Legge hosts the one-week trunk show — or direct sale clothing show — her living room and dining room will be transformed into a luxurious mini-boutique, with about 500 beautifully tailored pieces from 12 different collections, including jackets, pants, shirts, accessories and jewelry.

Despite the weakening economy, there's good reason her new job will be as hot as the fashions she's selling. First, Jane Reardon, the area's field manager for the Carlisle Collection, reports that the mid-January selling season has begun (elsewhere in the country), and in its first week, "we've had the best spring we've ever had." She says that women recognize "investment dressing" a necessity. Smart career attire, in her opinion, is required regardless of a weakened economy.

Second, there's Legge's training and experience as a salesperson. She is a graduate of the nationally renown sales program at the Campbell's Soup Company, earned her MBA and then had a long successful career with a medical marketing company. In the past few years, she has been volunteering within the school system, and most recently with the Cohasset Educational Foundation and its computer lab launch at the Osgood School. And although she occasionally dons a hockey helmet and shoots pucks with her friends, wearing the Carlisle couture may prove to be her best marketing tool, showing that she's smart, feminine and fun — and a significant player in the world of fashion.

And finally, Carlisle's reputation is like gold. Legge says, "After I joined the company, and started talking about my new career, I was amazed at how many people I know that are already existing customers." These high quality fashions parallel Chanel, Valentino, and Ungaro. The designers use fine European fabrics with exquisite details, and trendy but classic styles, so it's just possible that these clothes may outlast the buyer.

With price tags like $225 for a silk blouse, $350 for a pair of fancy embellished jeans, and about $1000 for a full suit, women who shop for these clothes are all business. And Legge, slender and stunning in a copper-colored fitted Carlisle jacket, is ready to go to work.

It all starts with an invitation by mail, not to be mistaken with the popular in-home parties where socializing and wine drinking take center stage. This trunk show is all about you. You'll make a private appointment, each season, which lasts about an hour or two. During that time, Legge will help you select the season's clothing in combinations that reflect your personal style. She will determine which cuts are most flattering, which colors suit your skin, as well as examine your existing wardrobe, determining what can be added or needed.

Reardon explains that some seasoned customers prefer to get in and get out. In fact, one woman who travels a lot and works in the financial industry has the shopping experience down to a science, "once purchasing about $4000 of clothes in 20 minutes." She says that this speedy transaction is only possible because her consultant has developed a relationship with the client. "She knows her likes and dislikes, what works and what doesn't work. And this woman was able to get on with her life."

The most appealing service for other shoppers might be the "wardrobe building." The idea, Legge explains, is that savvy shoppers choose one or two pieces at a time that are versatile and last longer than the big box retail fashions.

Legge asks, "How many times have you said, 'I've got nothing to wear' while staring at a completely jam-packed closet?" With her initial investment in the business, she continuously receives training, including how to overhaul a woman's closet. By keeping a file on all the clients and their past purchases as well as what's in the closet already, she can recommend smarter choices and wiser investments.

She adds, "Sometimes women might decide that they have too many clothes on their hands. I can help them prioritize by knowing what's in their closet." New collections build upon the last seasons' styles as well.

Another perk: for those worried about wearing the same sweater as "Jane Doe," Legge will inform you who has already bought it. And it just might be Heather Unrue, WCVB-TV Channel 5 newscaster or even Barbara Bush, both customers of Carlisle.

At the end of the appointment, you can't take the clothes with you. But Legge will order the clothes and hand deliver them two weeks later. On average, Legge will invite about 250 women to private showings in her home; her goal is to book about 50–75 appointments each season. In the end, Legge receives a percentage of the sales.

"I am thrilled to find myself in such a professional company." The Carlisle Collection has been around for over 25 years, and offers comprehensive programs for helping a new consultant essentially run her own business. Reardon says that average consultants in this area earn about $60,000, while the top salesperson earns $225,000 a year.

Paid parking

Paid parking meters in downtown Cohasset?

No one in Cohasset is suggesting the devices be installed on South Main Street but at a regional parking forum dubbed "New Parking Strategies for Town and Village Centers" last week, experts said parking meters can work and do not deter shoppers.

The forum, which was hosted by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council at Hingham Town Hall, was an eye-opener from the standpoint that it presented parking solutions in a new light.

Over the years some have suggested building a multi-story parking garage in the parking lot behind where Loring Hall and Nobles are located along Main Street in Hingham Square.

It has always sounded like a good idea to us – but after hearing the cost of parking garages and seeing slides of the eyesores they become, we are not sure that would be the answer or even be feasible.

We admit being intrigued by the paid meter idea, especially today when it is possible to pay using an ATM card and not have to search for change.

Experts explain that on-street parking has a value and charging a fee could discourage long-term use of convenient spots. In other words, employees who plan to park all day won't use metered spots and someone there to shop at a boutique or eat at a restaurant would.

There were other ideas and suggestions offered including allowing businesses and merchants to have all or part of the revenue generated from parking meters by establishing a Parking Benefit District.

Another suggestion: tossing out parking regulations altogether!

The regional planners explained that towns often plan parking lots for the "day before Christmas crowds" and the remainder of the time, much of the asphalt remains empty.

Shared parking areas that could be used for shoppers in the daytime and restaurant-goers at night were also put on the table, as were shuttles, and "zip" cars.

The forum was packed with interested citizens and governmental officials from here in Cohasset and from as far away as Harwich.

Everyone, no doubt, had different issues and concerns.

Plymouth, for example, is larger than Cohasset and Hingham combined and has a huge tourist population.

Hanover does not really have a town center with small shops but has business and parking regulations along Route 53 to contend with.

But the attendees all seemed to be in agreement that parking is an issue and looking at its solutions in more modern, environmentally and aesthetically pleasing ways could translate into something good.

Keep an eye on that little cloud. It looks like an override.

Town Census forms sent to households

The Town Census for 2008 was mailed to each household the week of Jan.21. Information obtained from the census is ultimately used to prepare the street list, annual registry of voters, school list, dog owner list and jury list. It also establishes eligibility for resident's tuition at state colleges, veteran reimbursement, senior citizen programs and other benefits. The census provides information to various departments throughout the town.

Dog forms are on a tear-off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 2008. Dog forms need to be returned as soon as possible with a current rabies certificate although some residents may have recently renewed the 2007 license.

Anyone who did not receive the census should call the Town Clerk's office at 781-383-4100.

Letters to the Editor

'Remember the women'

To the Editor;

The following is a copy of an email I sent to Senator Kennedy regarding his endorsement of Senator Obama. I wrote it in response to an email that I received from Sen. Kerry, which was essentially a forwarded email of Sen. Kennedy's statement endorsing Sen. Obama.

Chartis Tebbetts

Dear Sen. Kennedy,

While I respect your decision to back Senator Obama at this time, I am disappointed that once again a leading political figure in Massachusetts has turned away from an extraordinarily well-qualified woman seeking the highest office in our country. Massachusetts has a dismal record in electing women to the most important offices in our state. Time after time, the best and the brightest have tried to penetrate the "Old Boys Club," for that is what it seems to be in this state, and been dismissed. I look around the country, to Kansas, for instance, where a woman was elected to be the Democratic Governor in a Republican state. She was given the honor to present the Democratic rebuttal to the President's State of the Union address, and did an excellent job.

I look around the world, where in 47 countries, a woman is or was the holder of the highest office in that country. What is the matter with us in the U.S.A. and Massachusetts? There will always be well-qualified men who will be competing for high office. There will never be a time when a woman will win because there was no other alternative. So we go along, basically denying the opportunity for us to benefit from trying something really new in the White House: a woman calling the shots. How sad, and perhaps, dangerous.

Of course if Sen. Obama gains the nomination, I will campaign for him with enthusiasm. He is truly an inspiring man, gifted, and ready to govern. But what about Hillary? Can you imagine a woman better qualified to be our President?

I am 67 years old. I am beginning to doubt that in my lifetime we will have a woman as our President. I fear that if we don't give one a chance at this job, that wars will go on, and health security and excellence in public education and family values and fairness and compassion will take their places as priorities below other more traditional values like strength, competiveness, winning, wealth, military power, and superiority.

What's done is done. But, as Abigail Adams once said, remember the women. We are more than 50 percent of the population and our leadership style and strengths are untapped at everyone's peril.

Koed at MMA meeting

Fred Koed joined more than 1,000 local officials from across the state at the Massachusetts Municipal Association's 2008 annual Meeting and Trade Show, at Sheraton Boston Hotel and Hynes Convention Center.

Koed joined selectmen, mayors, managers, councilors and finance committee members during the two-day meeting where participants attended special sessions and workshops on local concerns. The workshops were designed to provide the latest information on issues such as collective bargaining strategies for health insurance, boomer-ready communities, the creative economy and a variety of other topics of interest to municipalities.

The MMA program included remarks by Sen. John Kerry and Gov. Deval Patrick. Also, Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino welcomed conference participants. The MMA conference also included a keynote speech by Bill Taylor, bestselling author and co-founder of Fast Company magazine.

In addition, Boston Red Sox announcer Jerry Remy was the Friday dinner speaker and author and political analyst Juan Williams closed the conference on Saturday.

The meeting also featured more than 220 exhibitors at its trade show, offering the latest products and services to municipalities. The MMA annual meeting is the single largest statewide gathering of local officials each year. It provides city and town leaders with an opportunity to meet with colleagues from different areas of the Commonwealth to share innovations and insights in managing municipalities.

Cracks in iron fence structure

MAKING TRACKS

COURTESY PHOTO

The most severely damaged fence support walls by the James Book Crossing.

Greenbush – Early this past week, we received an email from a shopkeeper at the James Brook Crossing stores. They noticed that the precast concrete structures that support the beautiful iron fence had developed minor, and in some cases, major cracks at the point where the fence posts have been mounted. We inspected the area, took pictures and sent them to the Greenbush project for their review. The project has acknowledged the problem and will be addressing it.

A bit of Greenbush history – This past month we were doing some research for another reason, concerning newspaper articles that were written from 1846 to 1849 when the South Shore Railroad was originally being constructed. The first article we encountered about the railroad project was in the 1846 Quincy weekly newspaper. The article told of a group of prominent South Shore residents who instituted a legal action against the South Shore Railroad. The reason … the residents claimed that steamboats were a much better and more economical way to get from the South Shore to Boston. Does this sound familiar, or what?

Another item we found during our research is that it was only after the railroad was in commercial service, which started in January of 1849, that private property claims against the South Shore Railroad in Cohasset were finally settled. A number of Cohasset residents who had lost property, or had their property split into two parts due to the railroad, could not reach agreement with the South Shore Railroad regarding the extent of the damages they were due. Under railroad law, the County Commissioners convened a quasi-judicial board that ultimately awarded damages to the residents later in 1849.

Little Harbor Project, last, but not least – By now we're sure you realize that construction areas are not a pretty sight. For those who live on the streets under construction, or drive over streets under construction, please drive slowly. Even after the work on these roads appears to be complete, it will be a while until paving will be completed. We have found from experience, whenever roads are dug up, the trenches will still settle, even if the disturbed earth is well compacted. Thus, it is just not prudent to pave immediately after construction even though that's what we'd like as residents. It is always better to let the road settle for a period of time prior to paving. How long will this be, you ask? There is no set answer. It depends on the temperature, rainfall and other factors. However, we do have the commitment of the contractor that they will do their best to keep the roads safe and passable in the interim. If there are any issues in this regard, just call Kevin McRae at the project office, 781-383-2900. As we said in the beginning, please be careful and drive appropriately for the road conditions.

Short Term Project Schedule – At a meeting the week ending Friday, Feb. 1, after last week's deadline for this article, we received an update from the general contractor showing the work they are planning for the next 5 weeks. Please keep in mind, that like all construction work, this schedule is very weather dependent. We thought these data might be helpful information for you.

As we mentioned last week, a meeting was held last Saturday at Town Hall to update residents who live along new areas of construction. The Sewer Commission, the Water Commission and their engineers and field personnel were on hand to make the presentation and to answer questions. The session was very well attended and filled the Town Hall lower meeting room to near capacity. Nearly everyone seemed to feel that the presentation was helpful.

Several of the interesting facts from the presentations and Q&A session were:

- Water work is typically done on any street before sewer work. This is because water lines are replaced in their existing trenches, so digging is easier. The new, upgraded water lines are then more capable of withstanding the shock of removing the inevitable ledge during the construction of the new sewer line trenches.
- The upgrade of the sewer plant, which will create the additional capacity to handle the approximately 450 new homes, is underway at the present time. This work must be completed before the expanded system can be connected and placed into service.
- Many unanticipated underground utilities have been found that were unmarked from the initial survey work. The reason is that some are very old and just predate the current records. For example buried old Western Union lines were found on Jerusalem Road. These are probably reminiscent of the grand old estate days. Also, non-metallic water lines, if not on any of our drawings, cannot accurately be located prior to construction.
- The residential sewer betterment cost will include the cost of the sewer line installation as well as the plant upgrade that will provide the necessary capacity to serve the new connections.
- The sewer plant upgrade is designed to serve only the existing homes and not any newly constructed housing units. This could possibly change after it is demonstrated that there is surplus capacity.
- Why don't Keyspan and other utilities upgrade their services as long as the roads are torn up with water, sewer and drainage? The project has contacted the other utilities, but they have either not responded or appear to have no plans to do the work at this time.

Spygate revisited and revisited

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Glenn "Pop" Warner was the football coach at the Carlisle Indian School, Jim Thorpe's alma mater, in 1912 when he came up with a brilliant idea.

If he sewed pads the size, shape and color of footballs on the front of his Indians' jerseys then the opponents wouldn't know who was really carry the ball.

He tried it in a game against Syracuse and it worked. Unfortunately, there was a Harvard alumnus in the stands that day and the Crimson was next on the Carlisle schedule.

So much for Spygate.

Football coaches have been bending the rules of the game ever since 1895 when John Heisman instructed Tick Tichner of Auburn to tuck the ball under his jersey and run against Vanderbilt. He scored in a 7-7 tie.

Now the Heisman Trophy is awarded annually to the best college player.

Nobody noticed that Georgia had only 10 players in their formation on the first play from scrimmage against Alabama in 1912.

The 11th player, flanker Alonzo Awtrey, was near the sideline, in bounds and onside, wearing white overalls and carrying a water bucket, just like the waterboy.

When the ball was snapped, he dropped the bucket and ran down the field and caught a pass. He was tackled at midfield but Georgia won, 13-9, and Alonzo won a spot in football history.

It's not as much cheating as it is seeking an edge.

Can Red Auerbach be called the Bill Belichick of Basketball when he recommends, as he did in his book, that the home court clock be made as complicated as possible to confuse the visitors?

Is it cheating when a National Hockey League team turns up the heat in its rink a notch to soften the ice when the speedy Montreal Canadiens are coming to town? It's been known to happen.

Not even the National Pastime of baseball is immune.

The home field of the John McGraw's Baltimore Orioles in the 1890s had tilted baselines so that ostensibly foul bunts would suddenly veer into fair territory and speedy Orioles would beat them out.

The Seattle Pilots of the American League in 1980 had their groundskeeper lengthen the batter's box toward the mound when a curveball pitcher was due to hurl for the opposition so hitters could move forward to swing before the ball broke.

The same year pitcher Rick Honeycutt of the Pilots was caught with a thumbtack taped to his finger and sandpaper attached to the tape so he could rough up the ball and make it do tricks on the way to the plate.

And they busted the Patriots for just taking pictures.

HEALTH NOTES

211 is the new information hotline

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Every day, someone somewhere in Massachusetts needs to find essential community services, an after school program, a food bank, or where to secure care for an aging parent. Many face these challenges, but don't always know where to turn for help. Frequently, anxiety changes the simple need for information into an emergency and the call reaches 911. Such calls disrupt the 911 system and cause real emergency response to be delayed. Hence, 211 was born. 211 is an information hotline that provides health and human service information and referral. It will also provide updated information on disasters, post-disaster programs, and volunteering and donation opportunities. It is designed to provide information; not aid.

It will also provide updated information on disasters, post-disaster programs, and volunteering and donation opportunities.

Formed by the Council of Massachusetts United Ways, 211 is also used by Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency as the Commonwealth's primary telephone information call center during times of emergency. The easy to remember 211 telephone number is utilized as a resource for human service and public safety/disaster response and planning agencies.

211 offers citizens access to information on:

- Basic human needs: food banks, clothing closets, shelters, rent assistance, utility assistance.
- Physical and mental health: health insurance programs, Medicaid and Medicare, maternal health, Children's Health Insurance Program, medical information lines, crisis intervention services, support groups, counseling, drug and alcohol intervention and rehabilitation.
- Employment supports: financial assistance, job training, transportation assistance, education programs.
- Support for older Americans and people with disabilities: adult day care, congregate meals, Meals on Wheels, respite care, home health care, transportation, homemaker services.
- Support for children, youth and families: childcare, after school programs, Head Start, family resource centers, summer camps and recreation programs, mentoring, tutoring, protective services.
- Volunteer opportunities and donations.
- Vital updated disaster information, numerous post-disaster programs, interpreter services and call tracking of caller locations. Mass 211 will also have the ability to act as the registration site for spontaneous volunteers and donations from the public during an emergency or crisis.

Mass 211 was created in response to the national Federal 211 program by The Council of Massachusetts United Way in partnership with the Alliance of Information & Referral Systems, a professional membership association that brings people and services together.

The Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency is the state agency responsible for coordinating federal, state, local, voluntary and private resources during emergencies and disasters in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. MEMA provides leadership to develop plans for effective response to all hazards, disasters or threats; train emergency personnel to protect the public; provide information to the citizenry; and assist individuals, families, businesses and communities to mitigate or prepare for, respond to and recover from emergencies, both natural and man made. For additional information about MEMA, go to www.massgov/mema. Visit the Mass 211 Web site for more information at www.mass211.org.

Remember, 211:

- Is a confidential call.
- Is available Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.
- Is an easy way to find or give help in your community.
- 211 responds immediately during times of crisis, to field calls regarding the crisis and to direct callers to services most appropriate for their needs.

Remember, 211 is not an emergency line. It is an information line you can use to get answers to your questions. Try it out: give 211 a call.

On Cohasset's TV talk show, Our Town, co-hosts Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin sit down with George McGoldrick and Bill Cavanaro of the newly formed Cohasset Sports Partnership to discuss their efforts to raise funds to build an artificial turf field in Cohasset.

Tune in starting Monday at 9p.m. on channel 10 or catch up on Tuesdays or Thursday at 9p.m.

Tune in Cohasset and stay informed.

Ghost hunters

The Cohasset Town Hall and its suspected paranormal "tenants" have become the talk about town — and beyond. WHDH-Channel 7 and reporter Sorboni Banerjee visited the Cohasset Town Hall Monday to feature the story on their 10 and 11p.m. night newscast. The report can still be viewed on its website, www.whdh.com.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer suggested the interest in the recent ghost hunt conducted by the Enfield Paranormal Society could be an opportunity to have some fun and possibly raise some money for the Town Hall's future renovations.

"Maybe we can bring in Bill Murray and the Ghostbusters," Dormitzer joked.

down to the Town Hall and by the time the polls closed at 8p.m. the number had nearly doubled to 2772 voters. Town Clerk Marion Douglas said around dinner time (6p.m.) began the biggest surge of voters, but there was a steady stream all day.

While last week Douglas predicted a 40 percent turnout, she was pleasantly surprised to see more voters at the polls, "I was so happy we got more, that was great."

On the Democratic side, the Illinois Senator Obama garnered 776 votes, while Clinton received 699 votes town-wide. While Clinton ultimately lost in the townwide vote with the tallies broken down by precinct a majority of Precinct 2 voted Clinton.

Romney and McCain had a very close vote, closer than the democrats. Romney received 627 votes, with McCain at 588 — just 39 votes behind. But, like on the Democratic side, when the tallies are looked at by precinct there is a change. Precinct 2 preferred McCain to Romney.

"We're very happy Romney won in Massachusetts as he should have being the former governor," said Kevin O'Donnell, Chairman of the Republican Town Committee. He also wryly noted Romney won more decisively in his home state of Massachusetts than McCain did in his home state (Arizona).

O'Donnell set up his car with Romney signs, but did not stand out in the rain, "as Republicans we're too smart to stand out in the rain," he joked. Obama supporters were energized on Highland Avenue so O'Donnell was not surprised the Illinois senator won in Cohasset.

Neither was Joe Stanganelli, one of the main organizers for the Obama campaign in Cohasset, "we were as grassroots as you can get."

Through e-mails, networking, signs and sticker, Stanganelli and other volunteers got out the word on Obama in the weeks and months prior to the primary vote.

Although Stanganelli was not personal friends with Obama, he attended Harvard Law School at the same time so he got to see the young to-be-Senator at close range, "I know what an opportunity he is for this country," explaining Obama's combination of intelligence, integrity and charisma is what is needed in the White House.

Cohasset and Duxbury were the only towns on the South Shore to vote Obama. In Duxbury, Obama and Clinton was statistical tie, Obama narrowly edging the former first lady by a mere four votes.

With the democratic nomination at a near draw, Stanganelli doesn't know who will ultimately get the nomination, but does say "momentum is definitely in our direction."

Following the election Tuesday, he's come up with a new slogan for the Obama campaign, "As Cohasset goes, so goes the nation."

Two voters requested Green Rainbow ballots, with one voting for Ralph Nader and the other Cynthia McKinney. With no candidates on the Working Families Party ballots, no one requested that party's ballot.

Cohasset has nearly equal registered Democrats and Republicans. Of Cohasset's 5,193 registered voters, 1,180 are registered Democrats, 1,197 are registered republicans, three are green-rainbow, one is working family and 2,804 are unenrolled. Voters registered to the libertarian or reform parties were not eligible to vote in the primary election (Cohasset has one voter register in each of those parties).

Many local and national political analysts were surprised with Clinton's fairly comfortable victory over Obama in Massachusetts. With more than half of the state precincts reporting, Clinton held a 58-40 percent lead over Obama. Clinton was declared the winner in Massachusetts around 9:20 p.m.

Mitt Romney was declared the winner of the Republican primary in Massachusetts soon after the polls closed at 8 p.m. With 50 percent of the precincts reporting at 10 p.m., Romney held a 51-41 percent edge over McCain.

Sen. John McCain swept a series of delegate-rich primaries along the East Coast Tuesday night, seemingly taking command in the race for the Republican presidential nomination. McCain won primaries in Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware and Illinois while Romney won in Massachusetts, Utah, Colorado, Minnesota, Montana, and North Dakota. Mike Huckabee is still in the race after winning five Southern states on Tuesday.

In the hotly contested coast-to-coast struggle for the Democratic nomination, Obama and Clinton are still neck and neck in the race for delegates. After the "Super Tuesday" primaries Clinton holds a slight lead over Obama in the delegate count.

COMMENTARY

LEE JENKINS

This is in response to the statements of the school committee letter last week (Feb. 1).

"All of the actions and performance we have witnessed from Dr. Walsh in the past four years have been of a very professional nature. We know some would have you believe that we have been an unquestioning passive board supporting Dr. Walsh. She and her staff have put our financial house in order."

After the debacle of the last superintendent, Ed Malvey, the Cohasset School Budget Investigation Committee was convened and presented their findings to the April 2, 2005, town meeting.

This town appointed committee discovered the following systemic problems within the School Committee: insufficient upfront information, incompatible financial reporting systems, acceptance of overrides, poor monitoring, weak communication and insufficient oversight over the school superintendent and school administration.

This committee believed Cohasset had an opportunity to heal the apparent divisiveness and bitterness in the town with the new school superintendent, new town manager and the town finance director.

Also at this same 2005 town meeting, through citizen's petitions two bylaws were passed that required the monthly reporting by the schools and the town of all spending and funds with the reports to be available at the public library for easy access.

In her first "bare bones, transparent, needs based, built from the bottom up" budget for FY '06, Dr. Walsh included a $10,000 raise for herself unbeknownst to the school committee. She acted directly against the request to refrain from school administrative raises for Fiscal 2006 as the town employees did for Fiscal 2005.

At the end of her first year in the summer of 2005, the school came to the Advisory Board with a request for $222,083 for unpaid bills, before the school "discovered" a surplus of $190,652. When caught in this obvious ploy, the superintendent only returned $109,000 to the town claiming the rest, according to state law, was to go into prepaying SPED.

At a concerned taxpayer forum held in April 2005, Dr. Walsh promised that the long awaited networking of the school financial files with the town computer systems would be completed by July 1, 2005. To date the school committee has not seen this implemented.

On July 13, 2006, of her second year School Business Manager, Dave DeGennaro, was "unable" to disclose the surplus available at the close of Fiscal 2006, as he and school chair Adrienne MacCarthy were requesting $109,000 of town reserve funds from the Advisory Committee. A few days later the school surplus was calculated at $432,603. For most of this period, Dr. Walsh had two business managers on the payroll: a full time manager employed in mid Aug. 2005, and her former associate, who was receiving money as a part time manager through Feb. 2006.

Through negative and ruthless override campaigns, the divisiveness and bitterness has not abated in the community

In the ensuing years, rather than attempting to correct any systemic problems and follow any recommendations of the Budget Investigation Committee, it appears that the majority of the School Committee has just done business as usual. Through negative and ruthless override campaigns, the divisiveness and bitterness has not abated in the community. In fact, due to the misinformation disseminated regarding the need for huge overrides, the distrust has been increasing with the disclosures of huge surpluses after failed overrides.

With the onset of deliberate confusing budgets, Dr. Walsh being fined by the state for violating Campaign Finance Laws and the School Committee discussing ways to punish the parents following failed overrides, the parents and taxpayers have been left bewildered and outraged.

To reward Dr. Walsh, the school committee rewrote her perpetual contract after the first three years, granting her a 23 percent raise over the next three years, increasing her vacation to six weeks plus increasing her sick time to an average of six weeks per year

Continuing the fiscal mismanagement, last fall the DOR demanded that $260,000 be removed from the school budget and returned to the town because it was determined that the school was illegally building their own cash reserve account by overtaxing the residents. This money was in the Circuit Breaker account used for SPED.

The town currently does not know the cost of taking the Lewis child to court to keep him in a SPED program against his parents' wishes.

Regarding "the creation of a memorandum of understanding between the two departments that would govern and the delineate each other's role when dealing with school related incidents," as parents it is important to read the entire memorandum, especially the definition of "reportable acts." This memorandum of understanding addresses "the reporting by school officials of reportable acts which they determine rise to the level of requiring police involvement." The key words, "which they determine," allows parents to be left in the dark.

In answer to Mr. Fusco's diatribe against parents regarding the CORI checks. Part of the "very flawed system" is the contract that the Cohasset School Committee negotiated with the teachers that limits the CORI checks that can be conducted on the employees.

"District will not conduct CORI check for individual employees more than once every three years without cause. Only those who are CORI certified, shall have access. Retain one copy only in Superintendent's office in a locked file cabinet separate from personnel file. Employee shall be notified when CORI report has been requested and shall receive copy of report upon request."

Unless parents do their duty by understanding the facts and standing up for their rights and those of their children, it is has been clearly demonstrated that your elected officials aren't going to either.

Vehicle fuel revolution

TO THE EDITOR:

The public (or the media which moulds our thinking) has taken little notice of ultracapacitor development, which promises to greatly accelerate the demise of petroleum as the primary fuel for vehicles, and rapidly expand the use of utility-generated electricity for vehicle propulsion. Currently, ultracapacitors are being used only in a few demonstration/test hybrid vehicles to supplement their lithium ion batteries, and in some experimental hydrogen fueled vehicles.

Batteries store and release electrical energy by storing or releasing ions (electrically charged atoms or groups of atoms) by a chemical process. Capacitors store and release ions electrostatically, a process which is must faster but usually provides much less quantity of energy. Ultracapacitors have some physical characteristics similar to batteries, and can store energy in quantities comparable to batteries. Having no constantly reversing chemical process, they last much longer than batteries and do not suffer the gradual degradation of output and of storage capacity that is characteristic of batteries. They can release and store energy much faster than can batteries, so they overcome the rather unexciting throttle response of hybrid vehicles, can recover far more of regenerated energy from braking, and can be recharged very rapidly (an advantage if the refueling station in home or service station is equipped with ultracapacitor energy storage). Currently, they are expensive and are larger than batteries, so development to counter these deficiencies is critical, and is receiving much attention.

Electricity is generated far more economically and environmentally friendly in large central stations than with small on-board engines, so plug-in vehicles are the wave of the future, with hybrids probably only an interim step to full electric. Unfortunately, the limitation on reducing our pollution from petroleum and other fossil fuels, and our bondage to foreign oil, may not be the speed with which we can introduce electric or hybrid electric vehicles, but the pace with which we can expand the nation's electric generating capacity. That pace is hampered by many factors, including false hopes for conservation, other public misconceptions, poor leadership, and the counter-productive deregulation of electric utilities. Will we limp along behind other, more pragmatic, countries, or will we regain our leadership?

Frightening experience

TO THE EDITOR:

The following letter was addressed to the Board of Selectmen.

On Dec. 29, 2007, going southbound I drove my car onto the railroad tracks at the crossing on North Main Street. It was a very frightening experience. My wife and I exited the vehicle immediately and I called 911. I was concerned that a train would collide with my vehicle. After my 911 call a police officer, whose name I did not get, was on the scene almost instantly, followed by Lt. Quigley and the Fire Department headed by Captain Bilodeau and firemen Herman, Forde and Durette. The MBTA was notified and the train was stopped. The responding men took over and I cannot tell you how impressed I was by their efficiency and also their kindness and concern. They repeatedly asked my wife and I if we were all right, if we needed help of any sort and reassured us that we weren't the first to make this mistake.

I would like to tell you why I ended up on the tracks. It was about 4:30 p.m., just getting dark, and we drove into an impenetrable fog bank. I am familiar with the crossing but because of almost zero visibility when I entered the crossing the only thing I saw was an unmarked telephone pole almost directly in front of me. I had to make a split-second decision to turn either to the left or to the right. I was afraid that if I turned to the left I might be turning into oncoming traffic and instead I turned to the right and ended up straddling the tracks.

I would again like to express my thanks to all of the responding personnel. They are a credit to their profession and a credit to the Town of Cohasset. You should be very proud of them.

Two towns affected by tragedy

He did say there was extensive damage to the cabin of the truck. "The roof caved into the cabin," he said.

"The accident reconstruction team will provide us with an idea of what took place, estimate the speed, and determine if the truck rolled over more than once," Hussey said.

When police arrived the two teenagers were trapped inside. The Jaws of Life was used to extricate Barrow. Mahoney was pronounced dead at the scene.

"Everybody is devastated by the accident."

— Selectman Fred Koed

Scituate High School classmates Rob Dongara (left), Mike Tierney (right), and Roly Barrie (background) head to the accident scene along Route 3A between Mendel Road and Pond Street on Saturday afternoon to place flowers for Timothy Mahoney, 16.

Mutual aid from the Scituate and Hingham police and Scituate and Hull fire departments assisted. Route 3A was shut down for several hours.

Hussey said there is nothing worse than a death involving young people.

"It is difficult for family and friends and for public safety personnel – it is difficult on everyone," he said.

The Board of Selectmen extended condolences to the family and friends of Tim Mahoney at its Monday night meeting. Koed grew up with Captain Mahoney, "everybody is devastated by the accident."

"I feel it's one of the most difficult things to be a police or firefighter and come upon a scene like that," said Koed.

Chris Barrow, remains in serious condition at Brigham and Women Hospital in Boston. A senior at Scituate High, Barrow suffered from two collapsed lungs and a snapped spinal cord. An operation stabilized his spinal cord Sunday, but that was all the doctors could do, said Jim Lagrotteria of Cohasset, Barrow's step-grandfather.

Scituate High baseball coach Kevin Greer said Barrow is "a great athlete" who had recently joined the team's off-season workouts in preparation for the upcoming spring season.

"He's the kind of kid people want to be around," said Greer, adding many of Barrow's friends hope to get up to visit him in the hospital. "we're saying our prayers and we hope he'll be at our practices this spring."

Although the police have not received the blood alcohol tests from the night of the accident, Lagrotteria said alcohol was not a factor.

"There is no OUI, his blood alcohol level was within the limits. I'd like people to know that," said Lagrotteria. He said speeding on a rainy, foggy night contributed to the tragic accident.

"Two families are ruined," said Lagrotteria, one having lost their son and the other having to live with the memory of the accident, "it is a tough time for both families."

Barrow faces charges

Cohasset police have issued criminal citations to Chris Barrow and a court date will be set.

Police have issued citations to Barrow for motor vehicle homicide by negligent operation and operating under the influence (alcohol); speeding; negligent operation of a motor vehicle, and other charges.

According to David Traub, spokesman for the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office, a court date will be scheduled for Barrow depending on his recovery and medical condition.

Cohasset Police Chief James Hussey said the accident investigation is continuing and police are looking to gather further evidence.

There was evidence of alcohol at the scene — a bottle of Kahlua. Cohasset police have not received results of blood tests to see if the teenagers had been drinking.

Barrow and/or his counsel can seek a hearing before a clerk magistrate to contest the citations or simply allow them to issue as charges and be put on for arraignment, Traub said.

If the defendant does not contest the citations and requests a hearing within about two weeks, the citations become charges and forwarded to the DA's office for arraignment.

If convicted, motor vehicle homicide OUI with negligence carries a statutory maximum penalty of 15 years in state prison, Traub said.

Barrow is also facing misdemeanor criminal citations of being a minor in possession of alcohol and minor transporting alcohol.

Motor vehicle citations also include marked lanes violation and failure to wear a seatbelt.

Enthusiasm abounds for South Shore Greenway

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The South Shore could have its own "emerald necklace" before too long. Enthusiastic support has been met with an idea to create walking and bike paths throughout five local towns including Cohasset. The pathways would connect conservation land and highlight points of interest in each town.

Judeth Van Hamm, president of Sustainable South Shore, and Steve Bobo, Board of Health member, came before the Selectmen to request the town's support of the project as it gets off the ground. The Selectmen gave the South Shore Greenway the encouragement and support they desired.

"I consider (this project) a windfall for the South Shore towns," said Bobo. The towns of Hull, Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Norwell are involved in the project. Right now, students at the Conway School of Landscape Design are drafting a master plan for connected greenways in all five towns.

While in some respects each town has been working on efforts in isolation, this project brings the towns together toward a common goal — and could possibly make for a more appealing grant application down the line. The combination of pedestrian access to the train stations and collaboration between several towns will make a compelling case, said Van Hamm.

"I see it as a major resource for residents and an economic boon for commercial interests," said Van Hamm, "I believe it will help every commercial node in our towns."

"I believe it will help every commercial node in our towns."

— Judeth Van Hamm, president of Sustainable South Shore

Cohasset's recent efforts have included completion of the Forest Avenue sidewalk and a bike path connection to Wompatuck State Park beginning across from the train station. The rest of Cohasset's greenway is already complete or in the works.

According to Bobo, it begins at the bike path to Wompatuck State Park across from the train station then will connect with the to-be-built sidewalk on Route 3A and King Street then pedestrians could have the option to continue to the waterfront and Hull via Forest Avenue or down North Main Street to the Village. Sidewalk connection then can take pedestrians or bike riders to the harbor or down South Main Street to the Cohasset/Scituate town line.

The town of Scituate is looking for funding to build a sidewalk on Country Way from the North Scituate train station to the Cohasset/Scituate town line.

"It will connect Cohasset residents to another train station," said Bobo and connect Cohasset to North Scituate center and then other Scituate areas.

Van Hamm, who lives in Hull, tried for federal grant funds for a similar project in her hometown in 2005 and 2007, but was not awarded the funding either time. She began to think broader and was able to get a team of students at the Conway School to take on the South Shore Greenway master plan as a research project.

"The landscape architects are not just connecting bike paths, it's connecting open space and greenspaces on the South Shore," said Van Hamm. Last week, dozens of residents from all towns met in Norwell to discuss the greenway.

"There's a lot of enthusiasm for this project," said Bobo.

Van Hamm and Bobo requested $400 from the town to contribute to the growing fund to pay for the landscape architects. Cohasset Cycle Sports has contributed $100 already. With a draft plan in place, the hope is all five towns could apply for a funding grant to make the greenway accessible to residents with maps and signage.

"I think it's a great idea," said Selectman Fred Koed and the Board supported his sentiment unanimously.

The students from the Conway School of Landscape Design will present a draft plan at a meeting Monday, March 3 at Cohasset Town Hall.

Capital investment

Special stabilization fund proposed for Town Meeting

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Capital Budget Committee wants to move from a short-term planning strategy to a more long-term philosophy toward capital purchases. To that end, the creation of a capital stabilization fund is on the table for the upcoming spring Town Meeting.

A capital stabilization fund is a separate fund dedicated to capital improvement, projects and equipment for all town departments.

Steve Gaumer, chairman of the Capital Budget Committee, took questions and received positive feedback from the Advisory Committee Tuesday night on the committee's proposed fund. Some members of the Advisory Committee have been advocating for a fund for capital investments for a while, said Vice Chairman Pat Waters, and were happy to see the stabilization fund come forward.

In recent history, the town has relied on free cash for maintenance and capital purchases, instead of including the costs in the department's operational budgets. Available funds from free cash changes from year to year making it difficult for the town to plan ahead for capital projects.

"When we don't maintain our assets adequately, it ends up being more costly in the long run."

— Steve Gaumer, chairman of the Capital Budget Committee

The CBC's role is to advise Town Meeting, Board of Selectmen and the Advisory Committee on issues relating to the capital budget. The CBC is still in preliminary talks with town boards and employees, but is looking to reach a consensus on how to adequately and appropriately support the stabilization fund financially, if Town Meeting approves its creation.

Ideally, the stabilization fund would be used for smaller capital investments and maintenance like DPW equipment, ambulances, painting or roofing.

"We've been paying cash the past few years but there is not a dedicated fund," said Gaumer in a phone interview "we shouldn't rack up a credit card bill to buy a police car,"

Much of the discussion centered on the possibilities of funding the stabilization fund the CBC has explored so far. One of the key concerns is ensuring whatever funding route is pursued will survive well into the future when the same people may not be involved.

While the CBC floated a $500,000 override in early September to the Selectmen, Gaumer said an override might not be the best route in the long run

"An override made sense in practicality, but (in later years) it is subject to political whims," said Gaumer. Once an override, a permanent increase in the tax levy, is approved by Town Meeting and by a ballot vote each subsequent year an article allocating the funds to the stabilization fund must be approved by a two-thirds vote at Town Meeting. In a year when finances are tight, the money could be spent elsewhere in the budget and its original purpose lost.

Another possibility is to mandate a percent of the budget to capital needs by placing it in the stabilization fund. But, Town Counsel has advised against this proposal because it binds the Board of Selectmen, the Town Manager and Town Meeting to an annual budget allocation, said Gaumer. In devoting a part of the operational budget to the stabilization fund, the funding pool for other town departments and services could be decreased.

The last option and what may prove to be the most workable, said Gaumer, is as the town pays down pieces of its excluded and non-excluded debt, that percentage can be dedicated to the stabilization fund. Starting in fiscal 2010, there will be a reduction in debt service that could be devoted to capital stabilization fund.

"Our overall concern is we have a capital base right now that we don't support," said Gaumer by phone. An inventory of town capital items, not including bridges or water and sewer infrastructure, estimates the town's capital is worth about $96 million. Each year, only a few hundred thousand dollars is spent in free cash to maintain the town's assets, said Gaumer.

"When we don't maintain our assets adequately, it ends up being more costly in the long run," said Gaumer.

The discussion on the capital stabilization fund will continue in the coming weeks within the CBC and with other town boards, including the Selectmen.

Four articles recommended for warrant

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Board of Selectmen recommended four articles for submission and approval on the Town Meeting warrant Monday night. Town Manager Bill Griffin presented background information on three articles, followed by Sewer Commission chairman Sean Cunning on one article.

Griffin was happy to report there were no unpaid bills from previous fiscal years therefore the standard article required no action from the Selectmen or Town Meeting. The Selectmen recommended indefinite postponement of the article.

Another warrant article proposes the creation of a post-retirement health insurance stabilization fund. This fund follows on the heels of two other stabilization funds created in the past few years for pensions and sewer betterments.

Another warrant article proposes the creation of a post-retirement health insurance stabilization fund.

"As we can yearly put money in the fund, we will," said Griffin, adding there may be money left over in this year's budget from health insurance and he would advise for that amount to be placed in the to-be-created post-retirement health insurance stabilization fund. Griffin said he would come back to the Selectmen once he knew that amount, a transfer of funds into the stabilization fund requires a two-thirds vote by Town Meeting.

The Board supported the creation of the stabilization fund in a 4-0 vote (Vice Chairman Ted Carr was absent).

In addition, Cohasset's memorandum of agreement to the South Shore Recycling Co-operative (comprised of 15 area towns) is coming to an end this year. A Town Meeting article seeks to renew Cohasset's membership for another five years.

Griffin said the co-operative could wield some power in upcoming contract negotiations with the contractor who removes the trash from the transfer station. It costs the town $4,000 each year to belong. The Selectmen recommended approval of the article.

Lastly, the Sewer Commission is looking to reclaim some of its sewer capacity by buying back betterments from residents. Town Meeting must give the Sewer Commission the authority to do so on a parcel-by-parcel basis, said Cunning.

While sewer capacity hasn't been such an issue in the past, "now that we are bumping up to our limits (of sewer capacity), we have plenty of people to take it," said Cunning. The Selectmen recommended approval of the article 4-0.

Skippers take SSL title for first time in 20 years

It's been an amazing run so far for the Cohasset High girls basketball team. Winners of 12 straight, the girls defeated Hull, 48-32, Friday and Norwell, 43-35, Tuesday to wrap up sole possession of the South Shore League title.

Cohasset is 14-2 overall and 12-1 in league play.

Sammi Lehr led the way with 17 points and 11 rebounds against the Clippers. Meredith Kelly added nine points and four steals, and Carli Haggerty chipped in with seven points and four rebounds.

Sammi Lehr led all scorers Friday with 15 points.

Skippers in must win situation

Recent skid puts boys behind eight ball

Eric MacCarthy
CORRESPONDENT

Falling to a 6-10 record, the Cohasset High boys basketball team's struggles continued against league opponents Hull and Norwell. Both games had great meaning to Cohasset, a team vying for a spot in the state tournament. The Skippers were unable to step up and took a hard loss to the Pirates, 53-48, Friday, and another defeat at the hands of the Clippers, 58-41, Tuesday.

"Our backs are up against the wall. It's our challenge to put forth a good effort in these next four games."
Cohasset coach Dorian Bryant

For the First Annual Winter Carnival held at the gymnasium the Skippers decided to go retro and wear their 90s throwback uniforms with the shorts pulled up high against league rival Hull. Unfortunately the charisma shown as the team came out with its retro uniforms did not translate to the floor.

Cohasset struggled in the first quarter settling for mostly outside shots, unable to work the ball inside.

"The big guys need to just post up harder and that's something we'll work on," Cohasset coach Dorian Bryant said.

Bryant also mentioned the tight defensive game plan Hull drew up to make it hard for Cohasset to get the ball to the big men.

After falling behind early, junior Marcus Charles nailed a big three at the end of the first quarter to bring the Skippers within eight points and not let the game get out of reach. Subsequently, the Skippers played much-improved ball in the second quarter and were only trailing 28-25 at halftime. This was mostly thanks to senior captain Pat McCarthy's three three-pointers and 12 points in the half. He finished the game with 21 points.

The Skippers great play continued in the second half as they went on an 11-3 run to start the third quarter giving themselves a 36-31 lead. Heading into the fourth quarter Cohasset led by a mere basket and this lead would not hold. Hull scored seven straight points to start the final quarter and had all of the momentum going its way.

Charles hit another three-pointer, finishing with 11 points, which was then followed by fellow junior Danny Martin's layup. That tied the game back up with just over five minutes left, but the next five minutes were something Cohasset would have liked to get back.

The Skippers quickly fell back down by four; and despite continuously fighting back, they were unable to overcome the deficit.

"Unforced turnovers killed us tonight" Bryant said about those last five minutes where it was still any team's game.

Cohasset's mid-season struggles continued against Norwell as the Skippers were outplayed. Norwell led 27-18 at halftime and Cohasset's offense was having trouble making shots. Martin led all Skippers at the half with nine points, including a slam dunk off his own steal. He finished the game with a team high 11 points.

Cohasset displayed signs of life in the third quarter as it came out strong and cut the lead to five points.

Norwell responded with seven unanswered points and continued to score at will.

The fourth quarter saw no mercy for these Skippers as Norwell's lead made it up to 20 points and Cohasset's offense just could not find a way to score.

"Turnovers and bad shot selection negated anything we did well and that was a killer," Bryant said.

Bryant described the game as a "combination of Norwell playing really well and us just not executing." He added that it simply meant going through everything again in practice and that practice was the only way to overcome their problems.

With only four games remaining, Cohasset must win all four games to earn a spot in the state tournament.

"Our backs are up against the wall," Bryant said. "It's our challenge to put forth a good effort in these next four games."

Boys come in second in May Shore League; prep for Saturday

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High wrestling team fell short of winning back-to-back May Shore League titles with a, 42-31, loss to Tri-County Vocational, Tuesday.

Both teams spilt seven-to-seven, but Tri County had seven pins to Cohasset's three. Cohasset finished the regular season with a 9-19 overall record and a 5-1 mark in the MSL.

The Skippers won six of their first seven matches starting at 140, but only managed one win over the next seven matches.

Jack Murphy (119), Andrew Littauer (140), David Toomey (145), Nick Secatore (160), Mike Froio (171), Thomas Flibotte (189) and Steven Hurlbut all won. Froio, Flibotte and Hurlbut all pinned.

"I knew early we didn't get the pins so we were going to need an upset along the way," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "They (Tri-County) are really good in the lower weight classes."

Despite Cohasset's under par overall record, which is a product of an amped up schedule, Sweeney is pleased with the effort from his team. Although after Tuesday's match, the coach was understandably upset.

"For our age we are making strides," Sweeney said. "The kids didn't get down after (Tri-County) they stayed upbeat, maybe better than me. They had a good perspective on it."

Cohasset's ability to show up on the mat everyday and work hard is one reason the boys can take the most from tough losses.

"They never stopped working," Sweeney said. "They come ready to work, its been great."

Cohasset has lost seven matches this year by one bout. Those should turn into wins as the Skippers mature next year.

Saturday, Cohasset High School will play host to the Division 3 South Sectionals for the second straight season. The top four teams qualify for the state tournament and the top four individuals at each weight class qualify for the state's as well.

Rockland, Pembroke and Hingham are all favorites in the tournament, but the fourth spot is open to just about any team.

"Hopefully we get a good effort," Sweeney said. "I want to get at least half a dozen kids in the state tourney."

Last year Hurlbut and Toomey finished third and fourth, both qualifying. As far as the home mat advantage, it's something that can't hurt the Skippers.

"It helps to be in your own gym," Sweeney said. "The kids enjoy it. The kids can rest up if they have long breaks."

Waves wash over competition

19 local swimmers qualify for New England 13-and-over championships

Nineteen members of the Weymouth Waves swim team have qualified for the New England 13-and-over age group championships that will be hosted by Harvard University beginning this Thursday, Feb. 7, and concluding Sunday, Feb. 10.

The Waves, under head coach Mike Riley, swim out of the Weymouth Club (health and fitness facility).

Actually, for the coaching staff and swimmers, it is the first of two very busy weekends as the following weekend (Feb. 15-17), 91 Waves will be competing at the Regional meet, which will be conducted at Salem State College.

However, first things first, and that is this weekend's Championship at Harvard.

Heading the list of the 19 swimmers are 15-year-old Caitlin Cronin (Kingston), 14-year-old Peter McDonald (Norwell) and 14-year-old Milou Lammers (Hingham), each of whom has qualified in seven events.

Not far behind is Weymouth's Samantha Sliwinski (Weymouth), who will swim in six events.

Samantha's older brother, Ian, will compete in five events. The Sliwinskis are two of five swimmers from Weymouth who will be at Harvard. The others are Kevin Boddie, who will swim in three events, and Al Auclair and Kyle Ripley, who are entered in one event each.

The other swimmers, who have qualified for this weekend's age group championships, by town are: 14-year-old Olivia Dilorati (Braintree), four events; 17-year-old Rose Buckley (Brockton), two events; 14-year-old Christopher LeDonne (Canton), two events; 13-year-old Hope Kissick (Cohasset), four events; 14-year-old Vincent Kennedy, (Cohasset) one event; and 17-year-old Jonny Drybanski (Cohasset), one event; 14-year-old Katie Kenney (Dedham), four events; 14-year-old Spencer Bogle (Hingham); 16-year-old Rachel Redfearn (Marshfield), one event; 15-year-old Clarissa Palmer (Randolph), two events; and 17-year-old Brian McGuiness (Scituate), five events.

91 Waves will be competing at the Regional meet, which will be conducted at Salem State College.

"Four years ago, we had two swimmers qualify for these championships, and this year we have over 90 (the age group as well as the Regional meet)," said Riley, who took over the Waves program four years ago. "This is a testament to the hard work the swimmers have done. We started swimming back Sept. 11th, and it has taken a strong commitment on the part of the swimmers to reach this point.

"It is also a tribute to the hard work put in by the coaches," Riley said. "Our coaches have worked very hard with their swimmers and it shows."

In addition to Riley, the other members of the Waves staff includes Chelsea Brace, who is the head coach of the age group swimmers, and Meg Folcarelli and Nikki Burnham, both of whom coach the 10-and-unders.

Introducing the Norwell/Cohasset gymnastics team

Although the season is drawing to a close for the Cohasset/Norwell varsity gymnastics team, the energy level and attitudes of the girls remains high. Whether they are practicing floor, bars, beam, or vault, these gymnasts are always having a good time and working to the best of their ability.

"This season we are a building team, lots of new faces and positive attitudes," says Norwell/Cohasset coach Amy Maree, "This is a great group of girls and I expect many things to come in the following years."

Amy Maree graduated from Bridgewater State College earning a Bachelors of Science in Physical Education with a concentration in Recreation. Snowmobiling is her favorite activity and one day she wants to work for Disneyworld. "Great job girls, from such a young team! We will miss our two seniors, Kali and Juliette next year!"

Kali Devaney is a senior at CHS. This is her third year in gymnastics. "Everyone is very close, and we help each other improve with our love and support," said Devaney. She hopes to stay close to home next year at college.

Juliette Karp is a senior at CHS and the captain of the gymnastics team. "The girls on the team are really nice and we are all very close," Karp said. Her favorite event in gymnastics is floor and during her off time, she teaches gymnastics to the younger girls at the community center. Juliette has been doing gymnastics for 13 years.

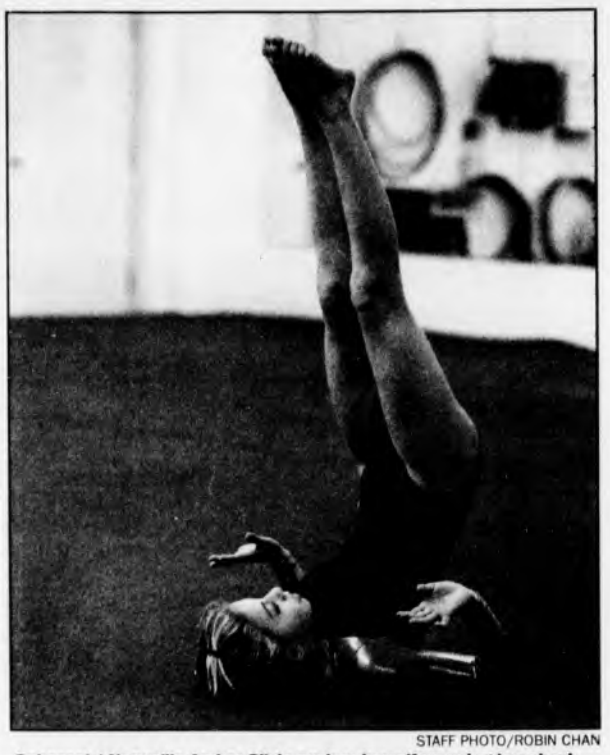
Cassandra Pacella is a junior at NHS and is a co-captain with Juliette. "Everyone tries their hardest and gets along great," she said. "I hope it's the same next year, except Juliette and Kali will be missed very much!" After nine years in gymnastics, Cassie is an all around competitor and loves gymnastics and this team. When she's older she wants to be a gymnastics coach and a kindergarten teacher.

Alexandra Smith is also a junior at NHS and has been doing gymnastics for six years. "We work together so well," she said. Alex competes floor and beam. Outside of gymnastics she is involved with Best Buddies and she used to be a figure skater.

Shiandra Cardoso is a sophomore at NHS. This is her fourth year in gymnastics.

"We all work together and help each other," Cardoso said. She competes in bars, floor and sometimes the beam.

McKenzie Hagney is a sophomore at NHS and has been a gymnast for five years. "We are all very supportive of each other, all the girls are hardworking and we are all very close," Hagney said.



Sarah Harding is our third sophomore at NHS. "I love these girls to death," she said. "I think of them as my sisters." Along with doing gymnastics for the last six years, she is a cheerleader and works in the playroom at the YMCA in Hanover.

Liz Driscoll comes to the team as a freshman at NHS and has been doing gymnastics for three years. She usually competes on the bars and beam.

"The team gets along great and we always have a fun time," Driscoll said. Liz does cross-country as a fall sport.

Hannah McIttrick is also a freshman at NHS. She's been involved with gymnastics for two years.

"We are one big happy family," she said. Hannah competes vault, floor and bars.

Cohasset/ Norwell's Amber Silvia pushes herself up using her shoulders during her floor routine.

Paige Richards rounds out the freshman list at NHS. She's also been doing gymnastics for two years. She thinks the team is really friendly and "are wicked supportive."

Carly Schwantner is one of two eighth graders on the varsity gymnastics team. She's been doing gymnastics on and off for 11 years. "Our team gets along great and has so much fun together," she said. "These girls are like my family." Carly's favorite events are the floor and the vault. She enjoys being on the team with her friend Amber and when she's not in gymnastics she's playing field hockey.

Amber Silvia, is the other eighth grader has been a gymnast for nine years.

"I love how the whole team is supportive and we are really close even though we range from eighth grade through twelfth grade," Silvia said. "I like that I have new friends from another town." Gymnastics is Amber's favorite sport and she would like to become a gymnast when she's older. She is an "all arounder", participating in vault, bars, beam and floor. Floor is her favorite event.

Tourney bound

Win over Hull puts Skippers over the top

The Cohasset High hockey team got back on the winning track with a 7-1 win against Hull, Wednesday night. Andy McKenna saved 13 shots in his varsity debut in net. Senior captain Frank Wheelwright scored a hat trick and sophomore Brendan Doonan added one goal and a pair of assists.

"For us, this game was big because it gave us the final two points we needed to get into the tournament," Skippers coach Bob Walsh said.

Cohasset is in second place in the South Shore League with an 8-2 record and is 9-4-2 overall with five more games to play.

"We still haven't played our best hockey this year and I'm hoping to see it before the end of the season," Walsh said. "With a tournament berth now secured, we can play for a seed position which is something the Cohasset hockey team hasn't done for awhile."

All-Scholastic football team

Cohasset's Cuneo, Pinkus, Doonan, McCaw and Snowdale among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top public school football athletes for this honor.

This is the Community Newspaper Company football squad comprised of athletes from Taunton, Lakeville Raynham, Randolph, Avon, Hanson, Whitman, Hanover, Marshfield, Weymouth, Braintree, Plymouth, West Bridgewater, East Bridgewater, Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, Abington, Rockland, Halifax, Plympton, Easton, Pembroke, Kingston, Holbrook, Carver, Cohasset, Duxbury, Norton and Mansfield. LIFE AT CHS

Friday could not have arrived soon enough. This week, there were strong overwhelming feelings, thanks to new class chaos, Spinnaker layout madness, and the distribution of report cards. Teachers and students alike were seemingly on edge. Thank goodness for some of the humourous morning announcements made by Ms. Berman's Public Speaking class to break the early A.M. dazes. Senior, Eric McCarthy's broadcast was a fan favorite, bringing a unique flare to the 7:30am time slot!

Also, the student council took a field to Cradle to Crayons to view the ins and outs of their chosen charitable cause. The student council will help package the toys collected during the winter holidays. Further CHS achievements include the published works of seniors, Brian Hill and PJ MacCaw in Teen Ink. Congratulations!

Readers don't forget that next Thursday the Valentine's Day issue of "The Spinnaker" will be available for $1 at the high school. So, parents there is no need to be alarmed, those flailing students waving papers are not nuts, they are just trying to do some friendly business. This issue is going definitely going to be great so get it while it's hot!

Christine Kent is a senior at CHS. Her column appears weekly in the Mariner.

PAC workshop on organizing skills

Back by popular demand, all are welcome to join the Parent Advisory Council for a presentation of "From Direction to Done," by Sarah Ward, at 7 p.m., Tuesday, March 4, in the auditorium of Cohasset High School at 143 Pond St.

The workshop is helpful for parents of all students, especially for those that struggle with organization. Sarah Ward will provide parents with strategies they can use in order for children to self regulate, initiate, organize and finish tasks at home and school. The focus will be on how to improve a child's executive function skills. Sarah is a speech pathologist specializing in cognition and attention. She teaches her clients organizational behaviors and then helps them generalize those behaviors in real life.

All workshops and presentations are free and sponsored by the Cohasset PSO/Parent Advisory Council. If you would like to be added to their e-mail network for updates, forward your contact information to southshorepac@comcast.net.

Applications should be returned to the Student Services Office at 143 Pond St., no later than Friday, Feb. 15. The lottery will be held Monday, Feb. 25, and families will be notified by mail that week.

A deposit of $75 is due by Monday, March 10, to hold the space. Tuition is currently $1,500 for the year, which includes four days of 2.5-hour sessions each school week, but is subject to change by the school committee.Debbie

Honor roll correction

The assistant principal of Hingham Middle School announces that the names of some students were left off the honor roll list due to a computer glitch they experienced. LUXURY UPGRADE coming to Grenada

Fran Golden
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Invading American troops are one thing. Invading wealthy tourists are another. And the path to a tourist invasion is in place on the sleepy Caribbean island of Grenada as developers seek to create "a new St. Bart's" for the high-end travel set.

British entrepreneur Peter de Savary is leading the way, making a multimillion-dollar investment, including a redesigned harbor for the capital, St. George's, so his new Port Louis marina can welcome yachts - very, very big yachts.

The attitude is build-it-and-they-will-come - the businessman envisions a place of luxury hotels and villas, eco spas, restaurants, shops and other niceties geared toward a chic set that includes his friends (he is an unabashed name dropper, peppering conversations with mentions of Bill Clinton, Mick Jagger and the like). The marina will be able to accommodate yachts of up to 300 feet.

With a population of about 102,000, Grenada has previously held a low-key position on the tourism map. In fact, the English-speaking West Indies island nation may be the last of the truly authentic places in the Caribbean.

Once a favorite of sailors as a gateway to the Windward Islands, there hasn't been much of a tourist trade of late beyond small hotels and resorts. Most businesses cater to locals rather than tourists, though a new cruise facility is attracting visits by cruise ships on Southern Caribbean itineraries.

Grenada serves up white-sand beaches, deep-blue waters, mountains, rainforests and much lush greenery - one-sixth of the land is protected as national parks.

Yet it is best known as the place where Ronald Reagan sent troops in 1983 - following a coup and amid increasing coziness with Cuba and the Soviet bloc - to "rescue" American students attending the island's medical school. The country has had a stable democracy since 1984.

The economic mainstay for generations was nutmeg, with one-third of the world's production coming from the "Spice Island."

Then came Hurricane Ivan, the 2004 storm scoring a direct hit, destroying about 85 percent of the structures on Grenada and stripping most of the nutmeg crop.

It takes nutmeg trees about 10 years to regenerate. So island officials took a serious look at tourism and opened the door to more development, with de Savary leading the way. He is known as the developer of the St. James's Clubs in London and New York, the Abaco Club in the Bahamas, Skibo Castle in Scotland and Bovey Castle in England. Tax incentives were part of the deal.

Grenada currently has only 1,500 hotel rooms. But with de Savary's plans for villas and luxury hotels, and the unrelated construction of a Four Seasons Resort and other small projects, that number is expected to double by 2012.

Grenadians see their island as "the sweetest island in the world," according to Junior Cuffie, harbormaster for de Savary's Port Louis marina. And they want to keep it that way, at the same time welcoming the opportunities development provides. Tourism officials are quick to point out the emphasis is on luxury and lesser projects have been turned away - the floodgates are not open.

At de Savary's Mount Cinnamon, a boutique resort, 21 luxury villas sold out in a matter of months last year. A second phase is under way with two- and three-bedroom villas priced from $795,000. Nightly rentals, available after March 1, are from $500 per night.

The white-walled complex occupies a hillside above Grand Anse beach, Grenada's main beach, with two blissful miles of white sand and not a high-rise in sight - though you can see the colorful Georgian buildings of St. George's harbor in the distance.

Elsewhere, the coast - Caribbean on one side and Atlantic on the other - is rippled with fjords and isolated tiny beaches, some accessible only by boat.

The scenery is stunning, and so is the unspoiled local charm.

In little villages, there is dancing in the street, literally, especially on weekly Fish Friday, centered in the northern village of Gouyave.

Visitors will see donkeys and goats crossing small winding roads. Some locals still wash their clothes in streams and you may see women carrying goods on their heads.

In one town, Victoria, a bridge just went up a few months ago to connect a main road to the school. Before that, the children, in full school uniform, would cross stones in a roaring stream to get to school.

Traffic lights have only been a factor on Grenada for the last decade, and there are still very few.

Will this all change with the upcoming development? Probably.

But, promised Cuffie, "We don't want to spoil it. We don't want it like Barbados and those places. We want it like Grenada."

Getting to know Gre-NAY-dah

1. Sit on a quiet white sand beach.
2. Visit the monkeys and hike the trails at the Grand Etang rainforest.
3. Take a dip in a waterfall at Annandale Falls.
4. Go game fishing for marlin, tuna and sailfish.
5. Dive to see the Bianca C, an Italian cruise ship that sank off Grenada in 1962.
6. Take in the sights and sounds of the bustling open-air market in St. George's.
7. Stop by the Westerhall Rum Distillery for a taste and tour.
8. Learn about nutmeg, coffee and cocoa production at the Belmont Estate (www.belmontestate.net).
9. Visit Fort George, built in 1706, and center of the island's Oct. 19, 1983, political disturbance when Maurice Bishop, and part of his cabinet, were executed by the people's Revolutionary Government. It's now police headquarters.
10. Try curried goat, callaloo soup and other West Indies dishes at restaurants including BB's Crabback (www.bbscrabback.com) on the St. George's waterfront.

IF YOU go...

WHERE IS GRENADA? The island nation is in the southern Caribbean, 100 miles from Venezuela. To the south is Trinidad and Tobago and to the north is St. Vincent and The Grenadines.

GETTING THERE: American Airlines (www.aa.com) offers connecting service through San Juan.

STAYING THERE: Mount Cinnamon (www.mountcinnamon-grenada.com) offers villas overlooking Grand Anse beach. All units are done up in bright tropical decor and have kitchens. The property is home to the poolside Savvy's restaurant and has a small spa and fitness club among facilities. Rates are from $500 per night for two (special rates apply in early March).

For a low-key experience, the Bel Air Plantation (www.belairplantation.com), is a nice hillside hideaway overlooking a secluded bay, with 11 cottages and villas, all with ocean views and kitchens. There's also an open-air restaurant. Winter rates from $350 per night.

BOATING THERE: For information on the Port Louis marina and available slips, visit www.portlouisgrenada.com.

Cafe, cinema and gallery combine in Maine college town

Christina Tree
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

IN NEW ENGLAND

Brunswick, Maine -For eight years Michael Gilroy traveled ancient trade routes through the Middle East and Asia, leading cultural expeditions and thinking about how to share what he saw, tasted and heard.

"I wanted to bring it all home to a community, but in a way that wasn't as elitist as a gallery or even an art house would be," Gilroy said. The resulting Frontier Cafe, Cinema and Gallery in Brunswick, Maine, is a winning combination - a culinary and cultural meeting spot.

Gilroy calls it "a crossroads." And it is literally at a crossroads of busy Rte. 1. The complex fills 10,000 square feet in the rear of a former textile mill. The cafe's 12-foot-high industrial-style windows overlook the Androscoggin River, and the gallery divides the Cinema from the Cafe.

Food, Gilroy said, is what first gets people in the door. The all-day menu features panini wraps and antipasti, mixing local and exotic ingredients. There are also Italian, French and Middle Eastern combination plates. The top-priced ($12) Cheese Market Plate is a palate pleaser with three cheeses, dried fruits, nuts, olives, fresh fruit, Belgian chocolate, a baguette and crostini. Beer and wine is available.

Patrons order and then wander through the Cafe, eyeing the artwork, thumbing through reading material in a living room-like corner, taking in views of the river from counter stools along the windows.

The artwork changes frequently. A recent Japanese Festival included an exhibit of kimonos and prints, along with Japanese music, film and food.

The Cinema is equipped with a digital projector and 75 seats salvaged from a movie house. It is the venue for art and foreign films, locally produced projects and high-definition concerts ranging from Bruce Springsteen to La Scala opera.

Hingham resident's photos enliven Blizzard of '78 Book

"The photos Eric took are some of the most memorable in the book. They really show the progress of the storm and how the city was transformed."

— Alan R. Earls, Greater Boston Blizzard of 1978

Like millions of others living in Massachusetts back in February of 1978, Eric Pence of Lafayette Avenue, was unaware that the snow coming down late in the day on Feb. 6 was anything more than just another New England snowstorm. However, recalls Pence, the fury of the storm started to dawn on him when he found the outside landscape significantly changed in the course of a half-hour subway ride from Cambridge to Kenmore Square that evening. By morning, with the power out, snow still falling, and cars already out of sight under the drifting snow, Pence got to work chronicling the historic storm with his camera.

For years, the stunning photographs that resulted were simply stored away. But several years ago, Pence posted them on his web site. Then, last year, Pence was contacted by Alan R. Earls, who was putting together a book for Arcadia Publishing on the Blizzard and wanted to use the images. Pence agreed and now the photos are bringing back memories for others as well. "The photos Eric took are some of the most memorable in the book," said Earls. "They really show the progress of the storm and how the city was transformed."

For Eric, though, the fun of capturing history eventually faded and despite a ban on driving and a public transportation system that was barely functioning, he decided to try to get to Weymouth, where his girlfriend and future wife, Patti Rosenfield, had recently purchased a house. "The first time I tried I got as far as Andrews Square in South Boston and they announced that the train couldn't go any farther," recalled Pence. However, a day or two later, persistence paid off — he was able to take the Red Line to what was then its terminus in downtown Quincy. "Then I just got out and walked down Route 53 for probably another five miles or so," he said. Pence recalls that there were quite a few other walkers but the only vehicles on the road belonged to the Army or local emergency services.

Pence and Rosenfield — who married in 1979 and moved to Hingham in 1982 — spent the several more days enjoying the enforced leisure before getting back to work the Monday following the Blizzard.

And, Pence adds, "My wife's main reason for moving to Weymouth had been to get a fenced in yard so she wouldn't need to walk her dog. However, with the three feet of snow from the Blizzard on top of two feet that had fallen a few weeks earlier, the fence all but disappeared, so it was back to dog walking."

The final kicker from the storm came about two weeks later. "I had actually paid for a car before the Blizzard but hadn't yet picked it up from the dealer," noted Pence. When he finally went to pick it up, though, it wouldn't start because the engine compartment had been entirely filled with the blowing and drifting snow of the Blizzard.

Despite the many inconveniences caused by the storm, Pence said, "We were fortunate, for us the storm was mostly a lot of fun."

Heating safety during winter months

By Robert D. Silvia
COHASSET FIRE CHIEF

It's a cold winter night. You decide to use a space heater, or perhaps light a fire in the fireplace, to save on the heating bill. Comfortable from its warmth as bedtime approaches you think, "What harm could it cause to leave it on overnight?"

Think again. While these heating devices may help you feel cozy and warm, they can become extremely dangerous if not used properly. Home heating equipment was involved in an estimated 62,000 home fires in 2005, according to the nonprofit National Fire Protection Association. The cost of these fires is more than just property damage. The cost includes roughly 700 lives and roughly 1,500 injuries.

Home heating fires are largely preventable when you know the rules. The Cohasset Fire Department's goal is to reduce the number of home-heating fires in our community. But we need your help. We are urging Cohasset families to use extra caution this winter when heating your home.

The majority of heating fire deaths are caused by space heaters! Most heating fires are caused by creosote build-up in the chimney.

To help keep our community safe and warm this season, the Cohasset Fire Department recommends that you follow these guidelines:

- Space heaters need space. Keep all things that can burn, such as paper, bedding or furniture, at least 3 feet away from heating equipment.
- Turn portable heaters off when you go to bed or leave the room.
- Plug power cords only into outlets with sufficient capacity and never into an extension cord.
- Inspect for cracked, frayed or broken plugs or loose connections. Replace before using.
- Have your chimney inspected each year and cleaned if necessary.
- Use a sturdy fireplace screen.
- Allow ashes to cool before disposing. Dispose of ashes in a metal container.
- Install smoke alarms in every bedroom, outside each sleeping area and on every level of the home. For the best protection interconnect all smoke alarms throughout the home – when one sounds, they all sound. Test smoke alarms at least once a month.
- Install and maintain a carbon monoxide alarm in a central location outside each sleeping area.
- Never use an oven to heat your home.

With simple precautions, help us meet our goal of decreasing home-heating fires this winter.

'Are you OK?' program offered by Sheriff

An 84-year-old Braintree woman has returned to her home in good condition after Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti's daily phone check program for the elderly discovered she had fallen and was bleeding from her head.

Operators of Sheriff Bellotti's "Are You OK?" program placed a phone call to the woman around 8:30 a.m. Friday to check on her well-being. The woman sounded troubled and said she needed help. She said she had fallen the previous night and was bleeding.

The operator called the Braintree Police, who summoned an ambulance that took the 84-year-old to a nearby hospital.

After being evaluated and treated at the hospital, the woman was released to return to her dwelling over the weekend.

Her case marked the 51st time "Are You OK?" has summoned help for someone who had fallen or was suffering from some sort of health emergency.

Each morning, "Are You OK?" operators place calls to roughly 270 people, most of whom are elderly and live alone, to check on their well-being. The program brings peace of mind to the elderly clients as well as their sons or daughters, who know someone is "looking in" on their parent's daily.

Bellotti introduced the free-of-charge program as a public safety service available throughout Norfolk County in 2001.

If you're interested in signing up for the program or getting an elderly relative on the "Are You OK?" phone list, call the program office at 781-751-3504.

A comfortable home, a wonderful family, and sharing moments with the ones who matter most!

Cazenove catches a lucky break

'My Fair Lady'currently playing at Boston's Opera House

Lisa O'Hare as Eliza Doolittle and Christopher Cazenove as Henry Higgins.

In the theater, telling an actor to break a leg is meant to bring him good luck. When Christopher Cazenove actually broke his leg, however, it almost cost him the role of his dreams.

"I wanted to succeed Jonathan Pryce as Henry Higgins in the 2001 West End revival of 'My Fair Lady,' but I broke my leg before that could happen. I'm glad I made my interest known, though, because, a few years later, the West End producers cast me in the U.K. and U.S. tours," explained Cazenove by telephone recently from the Chicago tour stop of the Cameron Mackintosh and the National Theatre of Great Britain's production of the Frederick Lerner and Alan Jay Loewe musical now at Boston's Opera House.

A popular British actor with many film, television, and stage credits, Cazenove is anything but casual when he discusses his interest in playing the role of the phonetics professor who boasts that he can turn a flower-peddling Cockney girl by the name of Eliza Doolitle into a manor-born aristocrat.

"This is one of the parts I have lusted after for the longest time. It is a great role in a great show with great music," says the 62-year-old Cazenove. "Henry Higgins is a very interesting character. He is a misogynistic bully who, as Rex Harrison put it, is very humorful by the end of the show when he finds his female side."

Based on George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion," and featuring book and lyrics by Lerner and music by Loewe, "My Fair Lady" opened to great success on Broadway on March 15, 1956 – with Rex Harrison and Julie Andrews in the starring roles – and went on to win eight Tony Awards that year including Best Musical. The 1964 film adaptation enjoyed similar success, winning eight Academy Awards including Best Picture. The current touring production, with direction by Trevor Nunn and choreography by Matthew Bourne, originally opened at the National Theatre of Great Britain in March 2001 before transferring to the Theatre Royal Drury Lane where it ran for over two years. The show boasts what is to this day considered one of the best scores ever written with songs like "Wouldn't It Be Loverly," "The Rain in Spain," "I Could Have Danced All Night," "On the Street Where You Live," and "Get Me to the Church on Time."

If the role of Higgins is to be forever associated with Harrison, then his singing style will also always be a part of that enduring connection and for good reason.

"I listened to Harrison, for whom this part was written, on the cast album and I learned a great deal. Speak-singing is how this part was written. It is, of course, how he did it and how I do it. It is utterly ghastly when people try to sing this role. I may do a bit more singing than Harrison, but only a bit," explains Cazenove, whom American television audiences may remember as Ben Carrington on "Dynasty."

Assuming the role created on stage by Julie Andrews and on film by Audrey Hepburn, and joining Cazenove as the only other U.K. cast transfer, is Lisa O'Hare, who earned West End acclaim in the title role of 'Mary Poppins.' Also featured as Mrs. Higgins, Henry's mother, is Marni Nixon, who provided the singing voice of Eliza Doolittle in the film.

In the stage production, the cast does its own singing and It is one of the best-loved songs in a show of much-loved music that is Cazenove's favorite.

"I love all the music, of course, but my favorite song – at least of those I get to do – would have to be 'I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face.' It comes at the time that Henry has finally found his emotional center and it provides a tender, really beautiful moment in a beautiful show."

"My Fair Lady" will be at the Opera House, 539 Washington St., Boston, through Feb. 17. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at broadwayacrossamerica.com.

Movie review

Black and 'Bruges'

In Bruges (A-)

Film Review
BY: AL ALEXANDER

Hitmen Ray (Colin Farrell) and Ken (Brendan Gleeson) hide out in a pub while awaiting orders.

When a film as good as Martin McDonagh's "In Bruges" rattles around in the wee ol' cranium and favorable comparisons to classics like "To Catch a Thief," "The Last Detail" and "Sideways" begin to emerge, you know you've experienced something special.

And special is exactly what "In Bruges" is: A hit-man parable that doubles as a picture-postcard portrait of a city that's been rightfully called "Venice of the north."

You gaze lustfully at the sights - Colin Farrell, if you're a woman, French hottie Clemence Poesy, if you're a guy - and absorb the ambiance of a historic Belgian city that literally hasn't changed since its medieval heyday.

As the title suggests, the city and its canals are the film's chief asset and No. 1 star. It lights the screen, too, with the power of a thousand Julia Roberts smiles.

But it's McDonagh, the award-winning and edgy playwright whose work has graced many local stages, who provides the bite with his quirky tale about a couple of Irish assassins (Farrell and Brendan Gleeson) sent to Bruges (pronounced broozh) by their psycho mob boss (Ralph Fiennes) to lay low for two weeks after a job goes terribly wrong.

Often called the David Mamet of the Emerald Isle, McDonagh is a master at toying with your mind, always playing against expectations (almost to a fault) and making every character and every scene — no matter how minor or off beat — play an intricate part in his scheme.

His greatest gift, though, is dialogue. It's real, it's fresh and it's devastatingly funny. But it's also full of basic truths about what it is to be human, no matter if the person reciting it is a lowly ticket-taker at a popular tourist attraction or a couple of mismatched hit men like Ken (Gleeson) and Ray (Farrell) who can agree on nothing — except maybe covering each other's backs.

You hang on every word of it, awed both by the meaning and by the melodic cadence of McDonagh's prose as it flows off Gleeson and Farrell's wagging tongues with urgency and universality.

I still can't decide who floored me more: Farrell as the quick-tempered, deeply reflective rookie who despises everything about Bruges; or Gleeson, as the laid-back, hopelessly romantic veteran who sees the possibilities of forgiveness and atonement in a real-life fairyland.

Each presents a fascinating character study on men who've spent so much of their lives operating on the dark side that they're not quite sure what to make of a place where magic seems to flow in with the nightly fog.

And if they're not careful, they just might find love, no matter if it's a fatherly sort that Ken feels toward his young, naïve protégé; or the romantic kind that envelops Ray after he stumbles onto a movie set and meets the lovely Chloe (Poesy), an actress with a past only slightly less dark than his.

It's amid this bliss that Fiennes foul-mouthed mobster, Harry, eventually raises his vengeful head, blowing in like a category-five tornado and sucking up everything in his path.

It's a terrific performance that finds Fiennes every bit as frightening as he was in "Schindler's List." But he's also funnier than you've ever seen him, which only cements the idea that Fiennes was born to play villains.

As mean as Harry is, though, he's always strangely empathetic, as are all of McDonagh's characters, even the snooty, racist American actor played hilariously by Jordan Prentice; and Chloe's crazy (and I mean CRAZY) jealous boyfriend, Eirik, fully fleshed out by the gifted physical comedian Jeremie Renier.

Of course, it's the old chicken and the egg: Are the actors making McDonagh's words humorous, or are his hilarious words making the actors funny? I'd give a slight edge to McDonagh on that one, after all he's the one with a couple of Tony nominations ("The Lieutenant of Inishmore," "The Pillowman") and an Oscar (for his short "Six Shooter").

But as much as I loved his script, not to mention his competence as a first-time director, I must quibble with a third act that piles on implausibilities and, worse, allows gratuitous violence to trump intelligence. It makes for a disappointingly conventional ending to a decidedly unconventional movie.

Still, it does little to taint the exuberance and charm of a journey that proves to be a real trip.

Rated R. "In Bruges" contains violence, language and some drug use.

Let's rock this joint

'Five Guys Named Moe' perform at Norwell's Company Theatre this week

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

"Five Guys Named Moe" will be at the Company Theatre. 30 Accord Park Drive, through Feb. 10. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787 or go online at companytheatre.com.

Things aren't going too well for Nomax. His woman has left him, he's out of money and he's an alcoholic. One very early morning, just as his problems seem ready to overtake him, he finds help from "Five Guys Named Moe," a zoot suit-clad 1930s vocal quintet made up of Big Moe, Four-Eyed Moe, Eat Moe, Little Moe and No Moe which emerges from his vintage radio to offer Nomax comfort in the form of the music of songwriter and saxophonist Louis Jordan. With a book by Clarke Peters and featuring the music of Jordan and others, "Five Guys Named Moe" was first produced in London's West End in 1990 and on Broadway two years later. A touring production of the show plays Norwell's Company Theatre this week.

"The music may be classic jazz and rhythm and blues, but the story is contemporary with people cutting and scratching just to keep their heads above water," according to Ron Lucas, an associate producer and sometime performer on the show's current tour, being directed by A. Curtis Farrow. "Fortunately for Nomax, 'Five Guys Named Moe' come to life to school him in the ways of survival through some terrific music."

It is music that led Jordan, a pioneering jazz and blues musician from the 1930s to the 1950s, to be alternately referred to as "King of the Jukebox" and later "The Grandfather of Rock and Roll." Jordan reached the top of the "race charts," now known as the R&B charts, more than 50 times with songs like "Choo Choo Ch' Boogie," "Don't Let the Sun Catch You Crying," "Ain't Nobody Here But Us Chickens," and "Caledonia." After Duke Ellington and Count Basie, Jordan was probably the best-known, most successful African-American bandleader of his day, heading "The Tympany Five" and working with everyone from Ella Fitzgerald to Bing Crosby.

Lucas acknowledges that even in his own life Ellington and Basie have sometimes overshadowed Jordan.

"My dad used to sing these random lines around the house when I was growing up, but I didn't what songs they were from or who had written them until I started working on this show and I was like 'Oh my God, that's something my father used to say.' It didn't take me long, however, to fall in love with the music of Louis Jordan. That's what often happens with our audiences, too. They're not always sure what to expect, but we have plenty of chances for them to get involved with the show including a rhumba-line to 'Push Ka Shi Pie.' Before long they find themselves having a great experience."

"Five Guys Named Moe" will be at the Company Theatre. 30 Accord Park Drive, through Feb. 10. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787 or go online at companytheatre.com.

Anne Murray sings with her friends

Recording artist to perform Saturday, Feb. 9, with the Rhode Island Philharmonic

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Anne Murray will be at the Providence Performing Arts Center, 220 Weybosset Street, Providence, R.I., Saturday, Feb. 9, at 8 p.m.

Anne Murray didn't know what she was in for when executives from her record label, EMI Music Canada, called her in for a meeting.

"My manager was there as was my assistant and what seemed to be all of EMI. I didn't know what was going on. I thought maybe it was some kind of intervention," Murray says with a laugh. "I told them right off that I wasn't going to do another album. As far as I was concerned, I had done my last album and that was that."

Fortunately, for legions of Murray fans in Canada, the U.S. and throughout the world – including those heading to the Providence Performing Arts Center Wednesday, Feb. 9, for her concert with the Rhode Island Philharmonic – EMI proved persuasive and soon the four-time Grammy award winner was sold on the idea of making a duets album of some of her best-loved songs with some of her favorite singers.

"I never once in my life thought about doing a duets album," the singer explained by telephone from her home north of Toronto last week. "And I was adamant that I had done my last album. I knew I couldn't do another album of original musical, because it just wouldn't sell in today's market. The duets idea interested me right away, however, especially when I started thinking about all the possibilities."

Murray, 62, started thinking about possible singing partners, too, soon after she shared one important idea with her record label.

"I suggested all my duet partners be female," Murray said. "It seemed to me it would not only simplify some of the logistics, but I also thought it hadn't been done before. The label resisted at first, but they came around."

They also signed nine-time Grammy Award-winning record producer Phil Ramone to the project. Ramone, founder of A&R Recording, had previously worked with everyone from Karen Carpenter, Elton John and Aretha Franklin to Rod Stewart and Paul Simon.

"Our first meeting to discuss this project happened in January 2007 and the album was done by October. Phil Ramone was the first producer they approached and he was in like a dirty shirt. He works very hard and I learned a lot from him. Once we picked the songs, I told him he had free reign with them. He never strayed too far from the original arrangements, which is a good thing, because people like to hear familiar songs done the way they first heard them."

With the veteran producer onboard, Murray set about finding duet partners for the album, "Anne Murray Duets: Friends and Legends," which was released last month and spent last week at #8 on Billboard's Country chart and at #42 on Billboard's Top 200 Albums chart.

"I knew the Canadian girls like Celine Dion ('When I Fall in Love'), Shania Twain ('You Needed Me') and k.d. Lang ('A Love Song') who grew up with me would probably be interested so we approached them first," says the Nova Scotia-born Murray. "And then we added some people I had worked with before like Emmylou Harris ('Another Pot O' Tea') and others who I had not like Carole King ('Time Don't Run Out on Me') and Olivia Newton-John.

"Olivia replied right away. She's a big Gordon Lightfoot fan so she wanted to do his song, 'Cotton Jenny.' Olivia was great and she came in prepared and was so good that we nailed it after only a few tries and we still had time to go out to dinner."

Before long the list of collaborators also included Nelly Furtado ("Daydream Believer"), Indigo Girls ("A Little Good News"), Amy Grant ("Could I Have This Dance"), Martina McBride ("Danny's Song"), Murray's daughter, Dawn Langstroth ("Nobody Loves Me Like You Do"), and others. One with a musical theater pedigree was paired with the "Canadian songbird" on what is perhaps her signature song.

"When I first heard that the label wanted me to do 'Snowbird' with Sarah Brightman, I wasn't sure what to think, because her voice is just so different. When we first got together in the studio, she looked me in the eye and said 'You'll have to help me with every line, because I really want to get this right.' She was really very sweet and the song turned out very well."

The 17 songs were recorded in Toronto, Los Angeles and Nashville, with Murray and each of her fellow artists sharing a studio, something almost unique to contemporary duets albums, which often find artists recording separately.

"That was one of my conditions. If I was going to do this album, I would get to meet each of these people." Murray made only one exception for someone she calls "my hero," the popular British singer Dusty Springfield, who died of cancer in 1999.

"Our duet is magical," Murray said of her pairing with Springfield on "I Just Fall In Love Again." With consent from Springfield's family and estate, a new duet was made using a 1979 Springfield recording and new Murray vocals. Springfield had made her recording in a booth, instead of on the floor with the musicians, so it was possible to isolate her vocals and place them on a new track with Murray's, making it seem like the old friends were once again singing together.

I had sung with Dusty so many times over the years. It was eerie to be in the studio again, singing along with her, knowing she is no longer with us. Everyone in the control room felt the same way. That song works beautifully as a duet and I never thought it would. I love Dusty's voice so much."

Anne Murray will be at the Providence Performing Arts Center, 220 Weybosset Street, Providence, R.I., Saturday, Feb. 9 at 8 p.m. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 401-421-2787 or go online at ppacri.org.

The Beatles back on stage ... kinda

By Ed Symkus
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Joey Curatolo has been Paul McCartney almost as long as Paul McCartney has been Paul McCartney. He and Steve Landes were both members of the Beatles stage show, "Beatlemania," which started in 1978.

"'Beatlemania' was a generic show," says Curatolo. "It was more of a look-alike than sounding like the Beatles."

In 1983, he and Landes jumped to "Rain: The Beatles Experience," which plays the Colonial Theatre in Boston, Feb. 6-8. "This one is put together to our tastes," says Curatolo "It's more in-depth."

"The big difference is that 'Beatlemania' played the same 30 songs for its whole 10-year run," adds Landes. "And it was much more focused on the multimedia; the Beatles and what we were doing as a band was almost secondary. So we've tried to reverse that. Our show is about the band, and we strive to authentically replicate this music, the records as you remember them, only live.

"There are more than 200 Beatles songs to choose from," he adds, "and we rotate them."

"Rain," begins with the Beatles during their Ed Sullivan Show days.

Landes proudly claims that they can play every one of them, "but there are some that we choose not to do. I don't think that every Beatle fan would want to hear 'Revolution 9' every night. We've really honed the act to songs that we know will work with an audience."

"It's really about pleasing three generations of Beatle fans," Curatolo explains.

"But we also do some obscure stuff," he adds. "We've done 'You Know My Name,' 'Martha My Dear,' 'Honey Pie.' We get out there."

The show includes costume changes, along with films that give a taste of the times. In telling the story of the Beatles, it starts out in the Ed Sullivan era, with songs that were performed on the "Ed Sullivan Show," then moves on through the Shea Stadium period, "Sgt. Pepper" and "Let It Be."

"It's as if you could force the Beatles to perform their whole career in two hours," says Landes, with a laugh. "We play the songs, use authentic guitars and drums, and go through costume changes and various looks. My hair miraculously grows to hippie length in the course of the show."

Curatolo refers to "Rain" as a capsule of the '60s with the music of the Beatles as a storyboard. The visual element — much of which goes on during costume changes — includes video montages that show newsreels and TV commercials from the '60s, and insert the cast members into pieces of film that originally showed the Beatles.

There's one other component that most tribute bands would likely choose to skip over, but members of Rain all agree is the way to go: Their live performances even include the fluffed words and the blue notes — in other words, all of the flubs — that are on the Beatles records.

"People don't realize that these songs are engrained in our psyche so well, that if those pieces are not there, then it sounds like something is wrong," says Curatolo. "We try to dissect every little thing — the words, the mistakes. There were a lot of little clams they did on some of these recordings. And we cop it."

"Rain" runs at the Colonial Theatre in Boston on Feb. 6 and 7 at 7:30 p.m., and on Feb. 8 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $36-$60. Call 617-931-2787.

Merle Brown gets things done

Self-professed 'townie' is Citizen of Year

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Merle Brown may give new definition to the term "townie."

Not only have Brown's family roots been firmly planted in the Beechwood section of Cohasset since 1812 – when his ancestors came to town – but Brown continues to donate innumerable hours to a host of projects and organizations.

"In all those years we have not moved more than a mile away since we first came," Brown said. "We are a townie family."

For Brown being a Cohasset native (apart from a stint in Germany when Brown was in the U.S. Army, he has never lived outside Cohasset) has meant giving back to the place he has called home for nearly all of his 75 years.

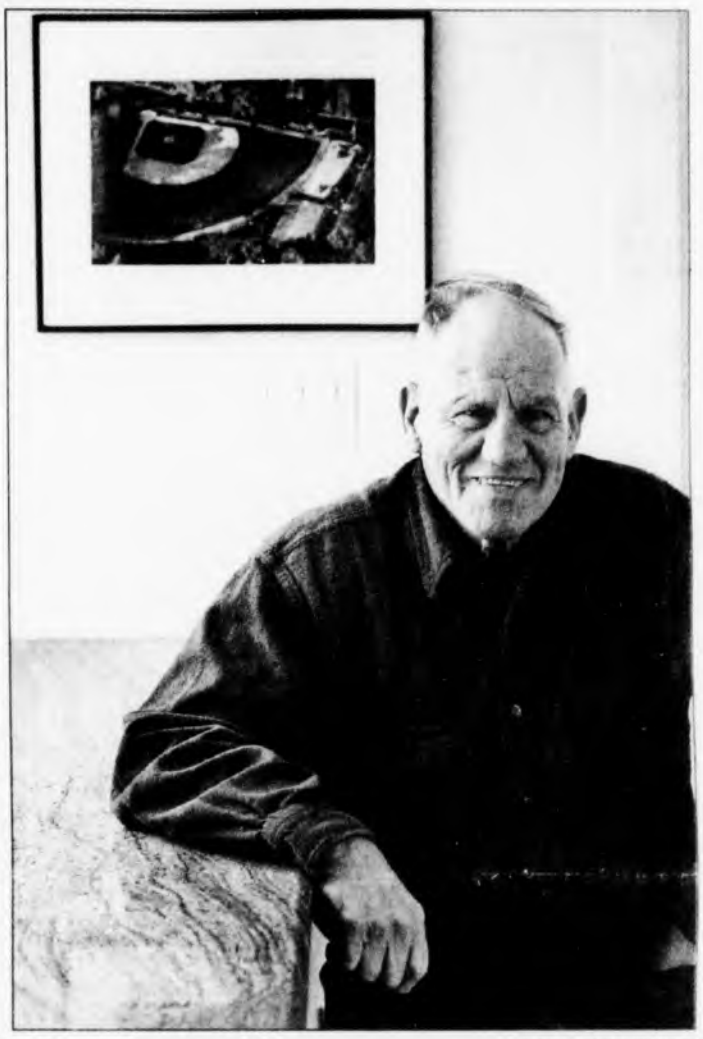
"I like doing it," Brown says in his trademark unassuming way. "I can't sit around and do nothing."

Years of involvement with the Boy Scouts that continues today were the predecessor to Brown's becoming one of Cohasset's most prolific volunteers.

It is Brown's undiminished love of the town, as evidenced most recently by the Beechwood Ballpark Project that led to his being selected as Citizen of the Year.

"Cohasset has been so lucky to have Merle Brown live in town," wrote Jane Long of Cedar Street in her nomination. "Throughout Merle's life he has consistently done as much as he could for the town he loves."

In fact listing Brown's many activities might require more newsprint than feasible for this story. Suffice it to say that some of those who nominated Brown for this year's award, pulled annual Cohasset Town Reports and detailed everything from his service as a selectman (four terms) to launching the recycling committee and "Pay-as-You-Throw" recycling initiative in town.



The Citizen of the Year selection committee consisting of Debbie Shadd of 31 Summer St.; Sheila Evans of 72 N. Main St., and Bill Burnett of 11 Linden Dr., joined editor Mary Ford at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square on Sunday afternoon to pore over the 16 nominations submitted by 36 individuals. The Citizen of the Year is an annual award started by the Cohasset Mariner in 1993.

Brown's house on Beechwood Street is a stone's throw from the house where he was born at 32 Doane St. and just around the corner from the refurbished Beechwood Ballpark, a rebuilding effort that Brown is quick to point out was also accomplished with the help of Glenn Pratt, a dedicated committee, and money from the Community Preservation Fund approved at Town Meeting

Brown noted the ballpark is for all ages and thinks the facility will help return a village atmosphere back to the Beechwood neighborhood where his late father E. Harold Brown operated a grocery store. "People used to say if you can't find it downtown – then go to Brown's and if he doesn't have it – you don't need it," Brown recalls about his dad's store.

It was back in 1980 when Jack Hubbard, who knew of Brown's work with the Scouts, convinced him to apply for the Conservation Commission. "He thought I would know about land and asked me to think

A Westie's happy 'tail'

'Macho' is on the road to recovery

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

With a name like Macho a dog has a lot to live up to. But almost since the moment his family set eyes on him, he has been perfectly described as macho man and now, more so than ever, he is living up to his name.

"We like to say he took on an SUV and won."
— Siobhan Stackpole

Macho, a one-year-old West Highland white terrier, or Westie as they are more commonly known, has fought the battle of his life over the past month. Macho was hit by a SUV in Cohasset Village a few weeks ago. With loving support from his family, veterinary care above the call of duty and an inner strength, Macho is now on his way to recovery.

"We like to say he took on an SUV and won," says Siobhan Stackpole, looking down at the alert, but tired, Macho sitting in her lap. He's been through a lot over the past few weeks.

Stackpole and her boyfriend, Terence, were walking in the village on a Friday evening planning to stop in at French

Sewer staging

ZBA denies neighbor's appeal

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Little Harbor water and sewer project staging area is allowed under the town's zoning bylaws.

Since November, the fate of the staging area located on Jerusalem Road has been in limbo. A resident in close proximity to the area appealed the Building Inspector's decision to allow the multi-functional construction staging area on a piece of private property in a residential zoned area.

"In a way, it was a tough call," said ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick in a phone interview, adding both sides had brought good arguments. In the end, Chittick said, the board took a strict constructionist approach to determine what were zoning issues and what didn't fall under the zoning purview.

In a surprisingly short deliberation in light of the amount of time the ZBA had devoted to hearing both sides of the issue over the last three months, each of the voting members gave their perspective on the issue and a vote was taken within 15 minutes time. The vote was 2-1 in favor of denying Eileen Craven's appeal.

Planning Board meetings move to Mondays

For the indefinite future, Planning Board meetings will be held each Monday evening. Therefore, the Planning Board will meet Mondays, Feb. 25, and March 3 and 10. The meeting date of Monday, March 24, is tentative.

After many years of Wednesday evening meetings the board knows this will be an adjustment, and will make every effort to make this a smooth transition, and accommodate any conflicts this change may cause while they transition to Monday evening meetings.

Sustainable Cohasset to host meetings

Sustainable Cohasset will host a showing of the award-winning NOVA documentary "Dimming the Sun." The film begins with a United States scientist's unexpected observation of a 3-degree increase in temperature ranges when all air traffic is frozen and contrails disappear from the sky immediately following Sept. 11. With all the intrigue of a good murder mystery, the film then systematically explores worldwide meteorology studies to find an explanation for the post Sept. 11 phenomena and reaches some startling conclusions.

Join Sustainable Cohasset for this 56-minute film at 7 p.m., on Monday, Feb. 25, at Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Additionally, all green book and blog lovers are welcome to join Sustainable Cohasset in an open discussion of green literature and/or movies at the regular meeting at 7:30 p.m., on Feb. 26, in the Atkinson Room at First Parish Church, 25 North Main St.

Some of the titles to be discussed are Barbara Kingsolver's "Animal, Plant and Mineral," Cormac McCarthy's "The Road," Alan Weiseman's "World Without Us" and Michael Pollan's "In Defense of Food." All are welcome. Refreshments will be served.

No races yet

Citizens have until Tuesday to return papers

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Citizens are not considered candidates until they return their papers with the required signatures.

Nomination papers have hardly been flying out of the Town Clerk's office this year. Although all but one open seat has had a resident pull papers, as of the Mariner press time there were only two races possible in this year's election.

As of press time, no new candidates came forward this week to pull nomination papers. Yesterday (Thursday, Feb. 14) was the last day for citizens to take out papers from the Town Clerk's office.

Residents who have pulled papers have until Tuesday, Feb. 19 to return them in order to be placed on the ballots. Citizens are not considered candidates until they return their papers with the required signatures. The Town Clerk must then certify signatures before the resident is considered a candidate.

Last week, Ronnie McMorris of 89 Doane St. signaled her intent to run for a five-year seat on the Recreation Commission. As a former Selectman, McMorris is no stranger to town politics.

When reached this week, she said a strong interest in health and fitness influenced her decision to run.

"The Recreation Commission has been looking for people to serve, it seems like every year. As someone who believes in public service, I thought it was time to step up," said McMorris. "The Cohasset (Recreation) Commission has done a fantastic job of programming over the years," said McMorris, adding Jack Worley is dedicated individual, who can include the transformation of the Teen Garage among his many accomplishments.

She'd like to see Cohasset Recreation introduce programming for adults in the community, in addition to the kids and teen programs, "I would like to be part of the work they are doing," said McMorris.

The two-year seat on the Recreation Commission is the only open seat not to have a resident pull papers to run.

The following candidates have returned their nomination papers and had their signatures certified: Karen Quigley for Board of Selectmen; Fred Koed for Board of Selectmen; Charles Samuelson for Planning Board (five-year term); Marion Douglas for Town Clerk; Glenn Pratt for Water Commission; Dan Evans for Town Moderator; Mary Lou Lawrence for Board of Library Trustees; Sheila Evans for Board of Library Trustees; Rodney Hobson for Board of Library Trustees; Wayne Sawchuk for Sewer Commission; and Robin Lawrence for Board of Health.

Some residents have pulled papers, but have yet to return them. Among them are Clark Brewer for the Planning Board three-year seat and James Dow for Sewer Commission.

George Haley of 119 Pleasant St. pulled papers for Library Trustees, but has not brought them back in. Incumbents Alfred Slanetz (School Committee) and Mary Granville (Board of Assessors) have yet to return their nomination papers.

Library Trustee and Sewer Commission are the only committees with more possible candidates than open seats. Four pulled papers for three open seats on the Board of Library Trustees and two pulled papers for Sewer Commission.

Positions available for the 2008 town election include: Selectmen — two for three-year positions; Moderator — one three-year position; Town Clerk - one three-years position; School Committee — one three-year position; Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - three three-year positions; Assessor—one three-year position; Board of Health — one three-year position; Planning Board — one for five-year position and one three-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Recreation Commission - one five-year position and one two-year position (to fill an unexpired term); Sewer Commission- one three-year position; and Water Commission — one three-year position.

Suspects caught after break-in at Curtis Liquors

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police Chief James Hussey said the men arrested following a break-in at Curtis Liquors on Sunday night are suspects in other burglaries including one recently at the Dunkin' Donuts off King Street and another one in Cambridge.

Police responded to a commercial alarm at Curtis Liquors at 8:35 p.m., the store closes at 6 p.m. on Sundays. Witnesses provided officers with a description of two vehicles that were seen leaving the plaza and heading north toward Hingham. Cohasset and Hingham police stopped a red Toyota Corolla at the intersection of Routes 3A and 228 in Hingham.

Police pursued a white Chevrolet van from Cohasset into Hingham, Weymouth, Quincy and Boston to apprehend the third suspect.

Emmanuel Cirino, 22, of Dorchester, was arrested after the stolen white van he was driving struck a light pole on Old Harbor Road in South Boston.

Cirino; Edward Nugent, 24, of Dorchester; and John Joyce, 39, of Quincy, face charges of breaking and entering a building in the nighttime to commit a felony; destruction of property; larceny; possession of burglarious tools and conspiracy. Cirino also faces additional charges of larceny of a motor vehicle, speeding, reckless operation, and failure to stop for a police officer.

The three suspects were arraigned in Quincy District Court on Monday morning.

The van driven by Cirino initially stopped and then took off, speeding and failing to stop for traffic lights, police said. State Police assisted with Cirino's arrest.

Hussey said the men, who went in through the back of the building, appeared to be planning to steal the safe because they took a dolly into the liquor store.

"Our officers' quick response, with assistance from the community, was key in capturing the suspects," he said. "This arrest may very well clear other breaking and entering(s) we have experienced recently in town."

Purse snatching

Cohasset had another purse snatching incident last week. Both Cohasset and Hingham have experienced a rash of this type of thefts over the past month.

In the most recent incident that was reported last Thursday, a Parker Avenue woman called and said earlier she had parked near the front of Shaw's. She explained the doors to her car do not lock. She took her purse but left her pocketbook in the car and when she came back out her pocketbook was gone. The only item of value in the pocketbook was a cell phone, police said.

The pocketbook was later discovered off Deep Run.

Last Friday morning in Hingham, a woman ran into Tedeschi's on South Street. A female thief grabbed the pocketbook she left on the seat of her unlocked car, surprising the motorist's two children, ages 9 and 6, in the backseat. Then on Tuesday at 11:30 a.m., a woman in the parking lot at CVS in Hingham Square had her pocketbook stolen while she dashed into the store. The parking lot was full of cars and shoppers were entering and exiting the store.

Police are urging women to take their pocketbooks with them no matter how quick their errand is. Chief Hussey asks that people report to police if they see anyone suspicious hanging around a parking area, even if they are just sitting in the car for a period of time.

Shoplifting

A Scituate man is being charged with shoplifting after he allegedly stole about $450 in meat, seafood, produce and groceries from Shaw's last week. Police were notified at about 1:15 p.m. Thursday (Feb. 7) that a man had just walked out of the supermarket with a carriage full of groceries. The responding police officer viewed the video that showed the man inside the store and leaving. Employees provided a description of the car and license plate. Further investigation revealed the vehicle was registered to a Scituate resident.

Scituate police went to the man's home, met with him and found a carload of groceries.

The 43-year-old man is being summonsed to court on charges of shoplifting over $100 and larceny over $250, police said.

OUI arrest

A 41-year-old Cohasset man is facing a drunk driving charge after being stopped for speeding on Beechwood Street last Thursday (Feb. 7) at about 11 p.m. Police said an officer was traveling east on Beechwood when the officer saw a large truck heading west at a high rate of speed. The officer pulled off to shoulder of the road for safety reasons. The officer turned around and caught up with the truck on Church Street. Based on the officer's observations and further investigation at the scene, the officer determined the man had been drinking. He was charged with OUI (second offense); negligent operation of a motor vehicle; and speeding.

Possible break-in

Police have not ruled out that damage to a screen and a broken windowpane could be a sign of an attempted break-in at a home on Jerusalem Road. The resident reported the incident to police last week and said he believed someone had tried to break-into his home. An officer met the victim and viewed the damage. An iron object lying on the ground near the front door that is used as a boot scraper could have been used, police said. No entrance was gained to the property. It is not clear if this was an attempted break-in or malicious vandalism, Chief Hussey said.

Car towed

Police had a car towed after a Jerusalem Road resident complained that the Toyota RAV4 had been parked at the end of the street all morning. Investigation revealed the motorist delivered newspapers. Chief Hussey explained that police did their "due diligence" and contacted the owner but could not locate the driver and ended up having the vehicle towed.

Laundry room

A resident on Old Pasture Road heard someone in the laundry room in the basement but thought it was a relative. Later it was discovered the relative had not yet arrived home. The resident also saw someone running through the back yard and called police the next morning.

It appears that someone entered the laundry room through an outside door. Nothing appears to have been taken but laundry was thrown about the room and the laundry baskets were on the floor, police said. The incident that was reported Saturday is under investigation.

Active parenting course offered

First Parish Unitarian-Universalist Church, 23 North Main St., will offer a follow-up parenting course to one that is currently underway. The new course for parents of children 4 to 12, "Active Parenting Now," will be held in three sessions Wednesday, Feb. 27, and March 5 and 12, in the livingroom of the church. A choice of 9:15 to 11:15 a.m. or 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. will be offered.

Perhaps some parents have all the skills they need, but if the following phrases sound familiar to you, this program will be helpful: "Stop teasing your brother, " "Go ask your father," "One more story, but that's it," "Go to sleep now," "Did you clean your room yet," "Pick that up," and "For the last time, no!"

It is a two-hour, fast moving three-session, video and discussion- based program that teaches both communication and discipline skills that eliminate the power struggle. You will learn effective methods to instill courage and self-esteem, create cooperative kids, make responsibility a reality, and develop problem-solving techniques. In short, you will understand your child's thinking. Tell a friend and come have some fun.

First Parish sponsors these courses with financial assistance available through the Social Service League of Cohasset. The program is written by national parenting expert, Dr. Michael Popkin and will be facilitated by Jan Tedeschi of Norwell, well know throughout the South Shore for her active parenting teaching.

The cost is $100 per person for First Parish members, $120 for non-members and a 25 percent discount will be offered for spouses attending the same program. To register, call Parish Administrator, Sandy Bailey, at 781-383-1100. For more information, visit www.askjantedeschi.com

Housing hunt

New tools to aid in affordable housing development

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

New tools to aid Cohasset in its pursuit of affordable housing units — a requirement mandated by the state's Chapter 40-B law — are on the table for Annual Town Meeting.

The Housing Partnership, the Selectmen appointed committee devoted to developing and maintaining affordable housing, presented two Town Meeting articles to the Advisory Committee last week (Tues. Feb. 5). The Partnership proposes a revision to the town's current inclusionary zoning bylaw as well as the creation of a housing trust.

No vote to recommend (or not recommend) the articles to Town Meeting was taken on either of the two proposals; rather the meeting was a healthy discussion of concerns and questions. The Partnership owned the floor for an hour and a half; the majority of the discussion centered on the creation of a housing trust, with the discussion circling back to the inclusionary bylaw for a short time.

"The Housing Partnership's role is to develop and maintain affordable housing, these two things are tools to helps us," said Housing Partnership co-chair Tom Callahan of the proposed revised inclusionary zoning bylaw and the creation of a Housing Trust.

Both tools would give the town the means to more aggressively seek out and develop affordable housing; something by state law the town is obligated to do.

"Whether we like it or not, 40-B is a requirement," said Callahan. Under Chapter 40-B, each municipality must have 10 percent of their housing stock deemed affordable.

"A trust is a tool many communities have used over the last 10 years to pursue goals to develop affordable housing," said Callahan. The state's Department of Housing and Community Development recognized this trend and as a result created a trust structure by statute to make it easier for municipalities to adopt the mechanism. The trust proposed by the Housing Partnership takes the state statute and adds a few provisions to increase local control.

> "Whether we like it or not, 40-B is a requirement."
> — Tom Callahan, Housing Partnership

Callahan describes the Housing Trust as the functional equivalent of a separate enterprise fund, like the water and sewer departments, set up for the purposed of developing affordable housing.

The Housing Trust still has checks and balances with a nine-member board, including representatives from the Housing Partnership and Board of Selectmen, overseeing the fund. Decisions on larger sums of money to buy or sell land and borrowing funds would need to go before the Board of Selectmen.

"Basically the trust gives the tools to be able to react quickly to the real estate market we're working in," said Callahan. The housing trust funds could be used for deposits on available real estate or to grant subsidies to private developers.

The Partnership plans to fund the trust through a variety of sources: developer contributions collected through the implementation of the proposed revised inclusionary bylaw, grants, gifts, loans and general appropriations at Town Meeting.

The partnership's application for an allocation of the Community Preservation Funds set aside for community housing development was voted down at a recent meeting. The Community Preservation Committee currently has about $196,000 in funds in the housing account.

Callahan explained CPC funds allow housing to be developed to target price points at both affordable (by 40-B standards at 80 percent of the area median income) and just above that (100 percent of the area median income). Both price points are lacking in Cohasset and developing both is a focus of the Housing Partnership, said Callahan.

"There's still a question about what affordable what it looks like and feels like," said Housing Partnership co-chair Clark Brewer. An affordable apartment at the to-be-built Avalon apartment complex would have a monthly rent of $1200.

Inclusionary zoning

In 2006, Town Meeting established an inclusionary bylaw, now the Housing Partnership is looking to establish more comprehensive bylaw, derived from Duxbury and Marshfield's inclusionary bylaw.

An inclusionary zoning bylaw is a mechanism for towns that have achieved the state mandated 10 percent affordable housing stock to maintain that threshold by requiring all future multi-unit development to contain at least 10 percent affordable units. For towns like Cohasset that have yet to achieve 40-B compliance, an inclusionary bylaw can help it get and maintain the 10 percent threshold.

The proposed inclusionary bylaw repeals the prior inclusionary bylaw/provisions and closes a loophole in the original inclusionary bylaw that left the Cook Estate development without affordable housing units, "the bylaw was not made applicable to single-family development," said Callahan.

The proposed inclusionary bylaw is triggered in all development of five or more units and single-family home development. In addition, it requires commercial development to contribute toward affordable housing in town.

Advisory Committee members brought up the partnership's attempt at affordable housing on 25 Ripley Road, which received opposition from the neighborhood early last year.

Callahan said the initial meeting with the neighborhood was an attempt to build consensus among the community, adding the neighbors had some real concerns including traffic and if the building was going to be enlarged, but other concerns were not.

Some Advisory Committee members were not surprised at residents' objections to affordable housing projects in their neighborhood, "why would they want anything to devalue the biggest investment they had?" said Advisory Committee member Tucker Glavin.

Callahan said there was little evidence to back up residents' claims that affordable housing in their neighborhood would lower they're property values. In Cohasset, Callahan gave the example of Straits Pond where many homes have been converted to condominiums, similar to those planned for 25 Ripley Road, and home values in that neighborhood have not been decreased.

Advisory Committee member Chartis Tebbetts said much would depend on whether the community would support projects on an individual basis, adding the Partnership's smaller project, town-wide approach as opposed to large clusters of units is the route to take, "we need to make it possible to make this town more economically diverse."

"The committee can move forward better and more successfully with a trust," said Tebbetts, "we can get it off the ground at no cost to the town."

How close is Cohasset to 40-B compliance?

Right now, Cohasset is holding steady with 76 countable units, most of them at the Harborside Apartments at 60 Elm Street. Town-wide there are currently about 2805 housing units, giving Cohasset about 2.6 percent affordable. That leaves Cohasset short approximately 205 units short of the 10 percent threshold required under the state's 40-B law.

Several large developments in the pipeline (Avalon, the TOD project and the Cook Estate) add up to 245 units, increasing Cohasset's town-wide housing units to approximately 3055. At that point Cohasset will need 306 units to comply with the Chapter 40-B. The to-be-built units do not count for the state until a building permit is taken out from Town Hall. With currently Avalon tied up in appeals, a building permit for the 200-unit apartment complex could be a year or more away. (Under 40-B because of a dearth of rental property, all units count in a rental complex even though only 25 percent would be affordable.)

"Until Avalon takes building permits, something could come in and it could be something the town doesn't want," said Callahan. Under Chapter 40B, a state law, a town's zoning board can approve affordable housing developments under flexible rules if at least 20-25 percent of the units have long-term affordability restrictions. Towns that are under the 10 percent threshold of their housing stock deemed as affordable by state standards are vulnerable to 40-B projects.

Avalon and the TOD mixed-use development include 202 affordable units, leaving Cohasset about 20 affordable housing short of the 10 percent threshold. The only other affordable housing project in the works is two affordable units by the Housing Partnership for 821 Jerusalem Road.

CZM awards grant to build four raingardens near harbor

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset Harbor is one of the town's greatest resources and attractions. Together, the Stormwater Management Committee and the Conservation Commission are making strides to protect the harbor and its tributaries.

Earlier this week, the town's application for a Coastal Pollution Remediation grant was approved, awarding the town $46,430 to build four raingardens in the Jacobs Meadow/James Brook watershed. Coastal Zone Management (CZM), a state agency, oversees this type of grant.

"This is a stellar example of what the committee has accomplished by coordinating within the town board and committee and in conjunction with state agencies to identify solutions that are effective in preventing and mitigating water pollution in the town," said Stormwater Committee Chairman Marty Nee.

The bioretention systems, which are more commonly known as raingardens, are considered a best management practice solution by the state Department of Environmental Protection. The low impact development strategy is designed to create a natural filtration process to treat stormwater runoff.

Topographically, some will have vegetation (flowers and other plantings) while other will just be a grass swale. But, it's what's underneath the ground — a natural filtration system — that really makes the bioretention systems work. The vegetation and soils remove pollutants from the stormwater, such as nutrients, suspended solids, salt, and petroleum byproducts. The goal is to reduce flooding by slowing the flow and to have cleaner stormwater throughout the James Brook/Jacob's Meadow watershed, which flows directly into the harbor.

Sarah Charron, a member of both the Stormwater Committee and the Conservation Commission, says the raingardens will primarily help with the pollution issues associated with stormwater. The strategically placed raingardens are most effective on capturing and cleaning the first one-inch of rainwater, the rain that typically picks up the most contaminants.

The effects of stormwater pollution on the harbor are most apparent in the summer when often following after heavy rainfall beaches are closed due to high levels of bacteria.

"A lot of that is caused by the first inch of rain water going straight into Jacobs Meadow, James Brook and then into the harbor," said Nee, "this structural best management practice will absorb a lot of the rainfall before it even gets into the ecosystem."

This latest project is part of a comprehensive effort to alleviate water quality and flooding issues that included the Jacob's Meadow salt marsh restoration project, a priority project of CZM's Wetland Restoration Program. The grant application process was a fairly competitive one with only seven proposals from a pool of 17 received funding. In total, $439,000 in grants was awarded to relieve coastal pollution.

To complement this grant, the Stormwater Management Committee and the Conservation Commission are jointly seeking $88,500 in Community Preservation Funds to build an additional six bioretention systems throughout the James Brook/Jacobs Meadow watershed.

The project received unanimous approval from the Community Preservation Committee at its recent meeting.

"It's protecting our most precious piece of open space," said CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey. Annual Town Meeting (March 29) will have the final say on this allocation. The committees hope to design and build the raingardens within the next five to six months.

"I think this grant shows the effectiveness of having a committee focusing strictly on stormwater issues," said Nee, "this committee certainly doesn't do it all, but we do pull all the different boards and committees together on this issue. It's important for the state to see the town is behind the stormwater problems from comprehensive standpoint."

The Stormwater Committee is also in the process of finalizing its stormwater management bylaw for the March 29 Annual Town Meeting. The bylaw seeks to implement controls on stormwater runoff so increased development will not exacerbate the flooding issues throughout town.

The Water Department has been the pioneer of raingardens in Cohasset and will complete installation of close to 50 of them in the Lily Pond watershed by the end of this year in an effort to protect the town's primary drinking water source.

Since 1996, the Coastal Pollutant Remediation Grant Program within EEA's Office of Coastal Zone Management (CZM) has provided more than $5 million in grants to help communities improve water quality degraded by non-point source pollution. The leading cause of water quality impairment in the nation, non-point source pollution is caused when rainfall or snowmelt moves over and through the ground, picking up pollutants and depositing them into nearby coastal waters, rivers and bays.

This year, the South Shore towns of Weymouth and Duxbury as well as the Cape Cod towns of Provincetown, Dennis, Brewster and Bourne received Coastal Pollutant Remediation grants.

Courtney Culhane, a Cohasset 10th grade student attending Notre Dame Academy who made the President's List for her most recent grades on her report card. This is the highest award of achievement that can be obtained and Courtney's family is so proud of her. Courtney is enjoying her time on JV Ice Hockey and will be jetting off to Italy over February vacation with her Latin Class for a wonderful experience and trip. Keep up the great work Courtney.

Samantha Bobo is a freshman at Tabor Academy and she received honors for her first semester. Samantha's decision to attend Tabor Academy was based on her interest in Marine Biology. Samantha is the daughter of Steve and Heidi Bobo and the granddaughter of Steve and Vivien Bobo, all of Cohasset. Everyone is super proud of you Samantha.

Stonehill College recently named Robert Carpenter, a member of the class of 2008, and Mary Previte, a member of the class of 2011 to the dean's list. At Stonehill, students must have a semester grade point average of 3.50 or better and must have completed successfully all courses for which they were registered. Nice job to both of you on this accomplishment.

Brenna O'Donnell, of Cohasset, has been named to the dean's list for the fall 2007 semester at the University of Vermont. Brenna is a senior Secondary Education English major in the College of Education & Social Services. This was nice to hear about Brenna, keep up the good work.

Mariner receives 16 nominations

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Mariner received 16 nominations from 36 individuals for the annual Citizen of the Year Award. A selection committee consisting of Debbie Shadd of 21 Summer St.; Sheila Evans of 72 N. Main St., and Bill Burnett of 11 Linden Dr., and editor Mary Ford pored over the nominations at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square on a recent Sunday and selected Merle Brown of Beechwood Street for the annual award.

The decision was unanimous, although not reached without considerable discussion about all the other very deserving candidates including:

• Madeline Altholtz, for working hard to do her best at everything she takes on whether school, sports or family obligations, she tries to do the right thing. She is a team player all the way, every day.

• Steve Bobo for contributing in so many ways to make Cohasset a better place for all: on the board of health, at the historical society, advancing the Center for Student Coastal Research, Cohasset Lightkeepers, and informing readers through his weekly Mariner column, Health Notes.

• JoAnne Chittick for organizing a group of 50 women for at least 27 years to cook dinner once a month for Rosie's Place in Boston. JoAnne has signed up the cooks, provided the recipes and reminded people when it is their turn to provide. For one person to have chaired this effort for so long, is indicative of her generous and loving spirit, and her concern for others less fortunate.

• Ralph Dormitzer for his tireless effort actively protesting the Logan Airport flight patterns over Cohasset helping to reduce the aggravating noise pollution experienced by Cohasset residents.

• Louis F. Eaton Jr. for contributions to Cohasset over 67 years including serving on nine town committees, on the MBTA advisory board, and as town counsel and in numerous other civic activities. As a Red Cross donor, he has also donated more than 17 gallons of blood over the years.

• John Englander, founder of the current Cohasset Education Foundation, which has created a support mechanism for the schools. He worked tirelessly to create bylaws, find donors, create fundraisers, and attract community leaders to the organization – all for no personal or political gain.

• Ann Marie Goff for her tireless efforts coordinating gift boxes for deployed troops, organizing the raffle prizes for the American Legion Clambake, and her involvement with the Relay For Life starting the Clark Chatterton team. She has also organized and managed a fundraiser for an uninsured cancer patient.

• Ronnie Goodwin for constantly and quietly giving of himself over many years both personally and through his business Goodwin Graphics. He truly understands that he is part of the larger community and has the heart to match the enormity of his selflessness and generosity.

• Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan, the "Greenbush Guys," for doing a truly outstanding job in monitoring and overseeing the Greenbush project, village revitalization and water/sewer projects. Leaving no stone unturned. The duo makes sure Cohasset's interests are looked out for without compromise to safety.

• Kathy O'Malley, whose volunteer efforts as president of the Cohasset Historical Society, and being its ambassador of good will, have seen the organization grow and thrive.

• Harry St. Onge, a cancer survivor, who has led the Relay For Life over the past several years. He has pored all his energy into making each Relay a successful one.

• Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts, for her dedication and service on the League of Women Voters, Cohasset Housing Partnership, on the School Committee, on the Diversity Committee, and on the First Parish Committee, to name just a few. As a leader she inspires others with her enthusiasm, work ethic and positive approach.

• Hamilton Tewksbury for his selflessness and quiet giving to Cohasset through the Government Island Study Committee, Hagerty Property Committee and the historical commission and his long time commitment to driving the medical van for the Council on Elder Affairs.

• Gary Vanderweil for his unselfish leadership and service to Cohasset on the Sewer Commission, Board of Selectmen, Cohasset Conservation Trust, Cohasset Land Foundation, CHS Alumni Field and Tennis Court Renovation Committee.

• Tom Wigmore for being the driving force behind the Sons of the American Legion, his service to veterans by placing the flags on veterans graves in all the cemeteries in town, and bringing the Healing Field flag display to town. Through his job as Cohasset Dispatch Supervisor, Tom also serves on the town's Emergency Management Committee.

about serving on the Conservation Commission," Brown recalls. That started a legacy of involvement with town affairs.

After 11 years on the Conservation Commission, Brown ran successfully for selectman in 1992. At his first meeting, then Town Administrator Gregory Doyon unearthed a photograph that had been down in the Town Hall basement featuring a prior Board of Selectmen and put it up in Brown's honor. The photograph included Brown's late grandfather, Selectman Herbert Brown.

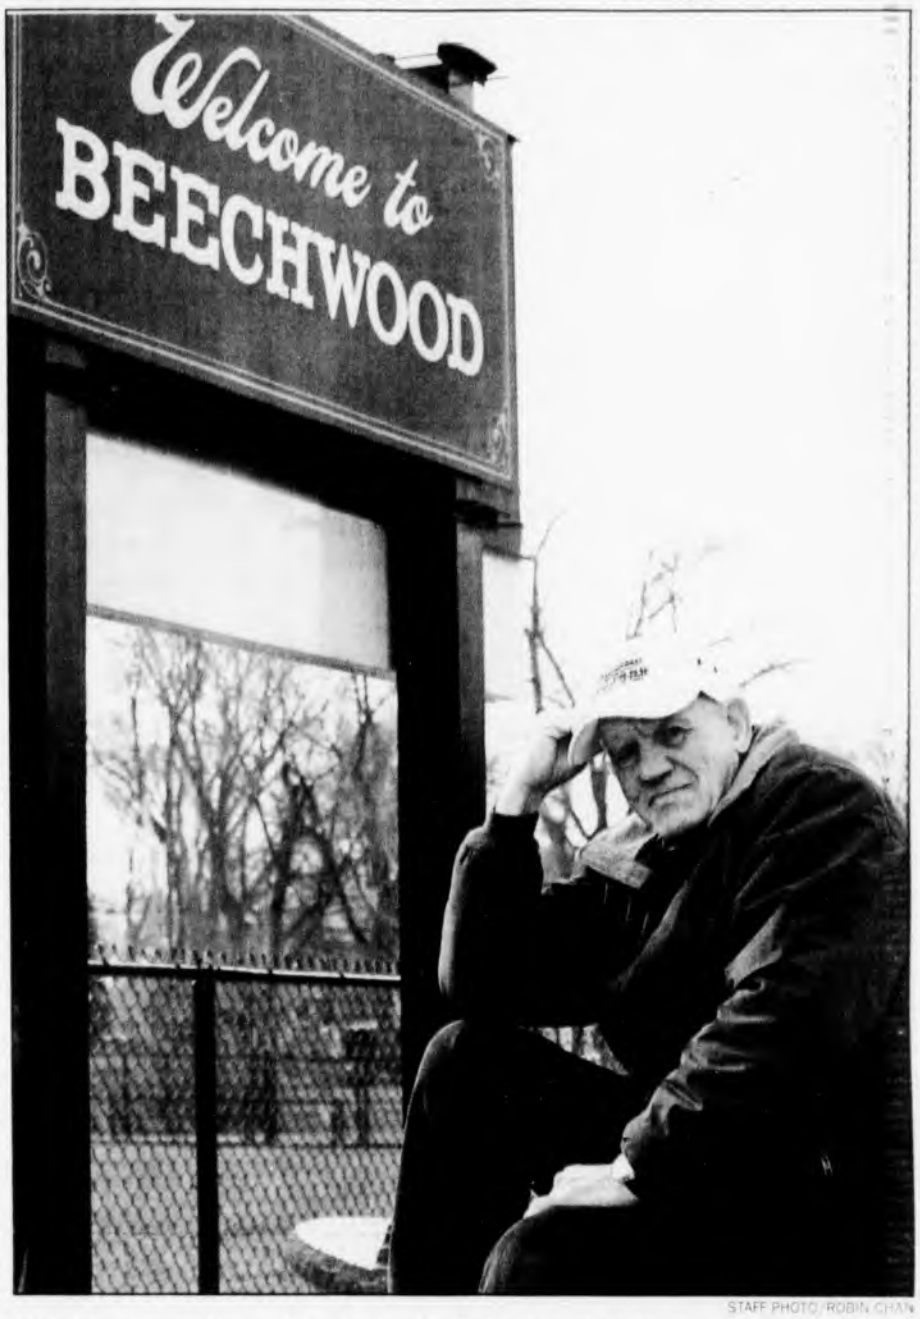
The retired project and manufacturing engineer (he completed his degree nights at Northeastern) has worn many hats over the years including his current role as a member of the Advisory Committee, which makes recommendations on both the budget and other articles to Town Meeting. Brown is also a member of the South Shore Recycling Cooperative and joins the Appalachia Service Project every summer where he volunteers his construction expertise.

"I was assigned as his partner on one such trip to Kentucky," Taffy Nothnagle wrote in her nomination. "I was worried that my lack of similar skills might disappoint him, but I should have known that his years in Scouting had also made him a skilled teacher.

"I was amazed to see how patient this big, gruff man was with teaching the teenagers and me how to use the power equipment and how to approach the project. He let us make mistakes and learn from them, and helped us to gain confidence in what we could accomplish."

Brown met his future wife Joan when they both worked for the Kennedy Company in Cohasset, a manufacturer of large radar antennas. They have been married for 48 years and have two children, Marcy and Jeffrey, and five grandchildren, Christian, Audrey, Elizabeth, Kathleen and Madeleine.

Brown, who graduated from Cohasset High in 1951, has never considered leaving Cohasset or the Beechwood neighborhood. "I like this area, every morning I can look out (my window) to the reservoir," he said. "I like walking in Wompatuck State Park to the Mount Blue spring, take a drink and walk home."



Although Cohasset has changed and become more of a bedroom community, Brown says it still possesses a small town atmosphere where neighbors know one another and it is possible to know many people by name when in the village or elsewhere around town.

Judging from the heartfelt notes asking that Brown be considered for this year's Citizen of the Year award, Brown has many friends indeed.

"No town should be without a Merle Brown and haven't we been fortunate to have him among us?" wrote Carol L. Martin in her nomination.

Margy Charles may have summed up Brown the best.

"Merle Brown has continually served the town with a smile, sort-of laugh, and great persistence to do good," she wrote. "No self-serving interests there. A good man! Can there be any definition in its simplicity more ennobling?"

Merle Brown, a grandfather of five, has lived in the Beechwood neighborhood his entire life. He is being honored for being one of the town's most prolific volunteers.

'Healing Field' planned for Memorial Day

The Sons of the American Legion is planning to install a Healing Field as part of the town's Memorial Day 2008 observances.

The effort should result in hundreds of American flags on eight-foot-tall poles temporarily installed on the town-owned island at the corner of Border and Summer streets. The island faces Veterans Memorial Park where the annual Memorial Day observances are held.

The flags sell for $25 and can be dedicated to anyone. In other words, the purchase of a flag is not limited to those honoring someone who is serving or has served in the Armed Forces. (Those who purchase flags will be able to pick them up after 10 days).

Checks should be made out to the Sons of the American Legion, with a note on the memo line indicating "Healing Field" and sent to Sons of the American Legion, PO Box 118, Cohasset, MA 02025. For more information, please visit www.healingfield.org/cohasset or contact the Legion post at 781-383-9657 or stop by the post at 98 Summer St. any weekday after 3 p.m., Saturdays after 10 a.m. or Sundays after 12 noon. Applications for Healing Field flags are available at the Post. All proceeds will go to veterans' projects of the Sons of the American Legion.

'Living History Series' features The Oaks Farm

Cohasset Historical Society will begin its Spring Lecture Series on Wednesday, Feb. 20, with a film from the Living History Series. Noel Ripley interviews Dr. Walter Kerr for his insights on "The Oaks Farm." At one point in the history of the town, this was a working farm owned by Clarence Barron owner of Dow Jones Inc. with its flagship paper, The Wall Street Journal. In the 1920s, the Barron family summered in Cohasset on their estate "The Oaks" overlooking the Atlantic Ocean and worked their farm, knows as "The Oaks Farm" located along Sohier Street. The last Barron to occupy the property was Clarence Barron's step-granddaughter, Jane Bancroft Cook, who died in 2002.

The Historical Society invites the community to the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St., to view this bit of history and learn more about the property and the people of the town. The program will begin at 7:30 p.m., there is no charge and light refreshments will be served.

Entries for edible art exhibit being sought

Cohasset High School is seeking entries for its seventh annual edible art exhibit, to be held beginning at 6 p.m., Thursday, March 6. The edible art competition is open to people 4 through 104. The artwork must be edible, meaning it must be safe for human consumption. It can be created by individuals or by a collaborative group. Artists will be responsible for setting up their pieces for viewing.

There will be two categories for judging: original artwork and copies of artwork. There will be many prizes, which will be provided by local restaurants and merchants. After all prizes are awarded, all work becomes property of the party, where attendees will eat and enjoy the art. The admission fee will be $2.

For information or to register, call Nina Berkowitz at Cohasset High School at 781-383-6100 or email nberkowitz@Cohasset k12.org.
